JOHN SMITH AT HOME

The good old name of John Smith does not suggest in English any great degree of aristocracy, and transferred to other languages it seems to climb the ladder, so to speak.

Thus, in Latin it is Johannes Smithus, the Italian smooths it off into Giovanni Smithi the Spaniards render it Juan Smithus, the Dutchman adopts it as Hans Schmidt, the French flatten it out into Jean Smeet and the Russian says Jonloff Smittowski.

When John Smith gets into the tea trade in China he becomes Jovan Shimmat; if he clambers about Mount Hecla the Icelanders refer to him as Jahne Smithson; if he trades among the Tuscaroras he becomes Ton Qa Smitta; in Poland he is known as Ivan Schmittiweiski; should he wander among the Welsh mountains they talk of Jihon Schmidd; when he goes to Mexico he is called Jontil F'Smitti; if of classic turn he lingers among Greek ruins he turns to Ion Smikton and in Turkey he is utterly disguised as Yoe Seef.

ACCOUNTING FOR GRAY HAIRS

It is this kind of a wife that makes some men old and gray before their time.

"William," she says, after William is curled snugly up under the blankets for the night, "did you lock the front door?"

"Yes," says William briefly.

"You're sure you did?"

"Yes, sure."

"And you slipped the bolt, too?"

"Yes."

"You know you forgot it once, and it gave me such a turn when I found it out in the morning. I didn't get over it for a week. We haven't much that anybody'd want to steal, I know; but I don't want the little we have taken, for I—"

"I tell you I attended to the doors."

"Well, I hope so, for goodness sake. You attended to the basement door?"

"Yes, I tell you."

"Because if you hadn't, you or I, one or the other, would have to get up and attend to it now. I read today of—"

"Don't care what you read!"

"It said that a man forgot to—"

"I don't care if he did!"

"And in the night a burglar walked right in and—"

"I don't believe it."

"I've a good mind to get up and see if you have locked that door. You're sure?"

"How many times have I got to tell you what I did?"

"Well, you thought you locked it that time you left it unlocked."

Driven to desperation, the poor man crawls out of the warm bed and makes his way down the stairs to see if he locked the basement door, and when he comes back the wife opens her eyes long enough to say:

"Are you sure that it was not locked when you went down?"—Pittsburg Leader.

GOLD NUGGETS STOLEN

They Belonged to the Canadian Government's London Office

A daring robbery was committed at the Canadian Government Emigration Offices in Whitehall, near Trafalgar Square, London. In the early morning a policeman patrolling the thoroughfare noticed that the large plate-glass window had been smashed, and investigation showed that a showcase containing ten gold nuggets in the rough, which was displayed in the window, had also been smashed and nine of the nuggets abstracted. The plate-glass had been first smeared with some sticky substance, and a hole made just sufficiently large to allow of the insertion of an arm.

The nuggets were very good specimens in the rough state that the Yukon goldfields produce, but they were small and thin, and their total value was not much more than $50. An official at the office stated that the thief would hardly be able to dispose of the nuggets, except at a trifling figure.

Historic Chester

Excavations for the extension of Chester Infirmary brought to light numerous Roman graves, the site being undoubtedly that of a graveyard used by the Twentieth Legion of Romans during their occupation of the city. In one grave were the skeletons of a mother an dbabe, who had been buried together. Near the spot were Roman sandals in a wonderful state of a mother and babe, who had been ties, tiles and other articles were secured in great quantity.

Blinding Headaches From Catarrhal Irritation Now Quickly Cured

The New Inhaler Breathing Treatment Does Away With All This Sort of Thing.

"A stuffy cold in the head, or an old fashioned attack of Catarrh are simply ancient history to me nowadays," writes S. Nathan Smith, from Cornwall, Ont. "I used to have the worst kind of building headaches. They were torture to me on damp days when my catarrh was bad. I would still perhaps be suffering but for the fact that I saw a friend inhaling Catarrhozone with apparent pleasure, and I got the dollar outfit in the Windsor Hotel Pharmacy in Montreal. I could scarcely believe the way Catarrhozone cleared out my head. It let me breathe easier than I had breathed for five years. Catarrhozone has cleared away every vestige of Catarrh from my system. My breath used to be rank—now it is sweet. My digestion was constantly disordered, but since the catarrh is cured I have no stomach trouble. I am a perfectly well man, and Catarrhozone did it all."

For speakers and singers and persons troubled with an irritable throat, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh or la grippe, Catarrhozone is of inestimable value.

The inhaler can be carried in your pocket and may be used at any time or in any place.

Large size, guaranteed, and sufficient for 2 months' use, costs $1; smaller size 50c.; sample size 25c.; all storekeepers and druggists or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

NO HOME RULE FOR IRELAND

If so, the Home Rule chalice will once more be dashed from the lips of the Eationalists, as it was when Gladstone had the cup in hand to offer them.

Recent bye-elections have gone badly against the Administration, and in each case it was intimated that the results have been largely affected by the disclosures regarding Lloyd George and Rufus Isaacs, two of the Ministers, with regard to Marconi shares.

On top of this there has come the sensational charge that some of said shares were also used by the then chief Liberal whip in connection with the party funds.

Under all the circumstances, the Asquith Government may, after a stormy time, manage to get the Irish measure through, but if so, it will undoubtedly be thrown out by the Lords, and then an appeal to the people would seem to be inevitable, when the tottering government will meet its well-deserved Waterloo.

KEEPING FARM HANDS.

Each year the complaints of farmers grow more and more vehement over the difficulty of getting and keeping good farm hands. Of course one great difficulty is that farmers need more men during the summer, and especially at harvest time, than during the rest of the year. Naturally men are not eager to accept jobs which will end just as the cold weather draws near. But even hands hired for the entire year are said to be harder to obtain, despite the fact that wages are higher than ever before. In addition a good farm hand who keeps his job the year round can save more money in a year than he could at any employment he could get in a city. Indeed, in a city he would probably spend every cent he earned. But it is true that farmers could afford to their help better wages, for prices for farming products were never as high as now.

The life of a farm hand is monotonous, the work is hard, at harvest time often lasting from 4 o'clock in the morning to 9 at night, and even in winter, when work is slack, there are few opportunities for amusement. It is clear that there will continue to be a growing scarcity of farm hands unless more inducements are offered farm laborers.

An American paper tells how farm hands are treated in Kentucky. If farmers in Canada adopted the methods of the Kentucky farmers they would probably be able to get plenty of help and help that would stick to them year after year. In Kentucky farmers provide their hands with tenant houses free of rent, with enough land for a good kitchen garden and often pasturage for a cow and suitable space for raising pigs.

Thus the farm hand who is married can raise the principal part of the food required for his family; has no rent to pay and can save nearly all his wages. He has a home, instead of being required to sleep in the barn and eat at stable after farmer's family has got through. Such a farm hand is more vgluable than a rover who works a few months on one farm and then seeks a change.

Housewives Say That

It is a good plan to roll sausages in flour before frying them, as it prevents their bursting.

It is very convenient to have a board sprinkled with kitchen salt at hand when ironing. The salt cleans the irons.

This is a color fastening for printed fabrics. [illegible] about 2 cents worth of sugar of lead in a gallon of cold water. Plunge in the print articles for one hour. Wring out and wash in the usual way. Colors never wash out after.

This saves on the coal bill. A good handful of common washing soda dissolved in a half gallon of warm water and then thrown over the coal and allowed to dry will lengthen the life of the coal by twice and give out just as much heat.

To save herring-boning when making a flannel undergarment first run the seam, then turn down once, but instead of herring-boning it run the seam again. By doing this you will find the stitches will wash into the flannel, and not be seen. It is also much quicker than herring-boning.

GOOD SPEAKING IS ESSENTIAL TO ALL

New Dictionary Makes an Excellent Vocabulary for Everyone.

Attorney—Do you know the defendant a reputation for veracity?

Witness—I do. It is very good.

Attorney—Do you know what the word veracity means?

This cross-examination occurred during a trial in a western state, and the lawyers are laughing about it yet. It would never have occurred had the witness been the possessor of The Times Dictionary.

Get a dictionary. You might be called upon as a character witness for a friend at any day. You owe it to yourself and your friends to be prepared for such emergencies.

Six consecutive coupons and a small expense bonus will secure the much-valued volume for you.

No home is a home and no office a real office without a dictionary. When you are unable to tell what a man is talking about you might just as well give up trying to do business. A knowledge of language is essential. When a man increases his vocubulary he has provided an asset greater than money. Money spent, like water that once goes over the mill wheel, does not come back, but a vocabulary may be used in getting the money back, and the money will buy more water.

The Times offer that stands without parallel is for a dictionary worth $4.00. It can be obtained with six coupons clipped from consecutive issues of the paper and a small expense bonus.

Great numbers of persons have obtained these dictionaries and you could not buy one from anyone that has one for twice the money if they did not know they could obtain another with six coupons. Even then it is doubtful if you could get it unless the seller had the six coupons ready to get another one.

Many a good clerical position has been lost by failing to spell some word properly. Many an employer has been made to feel like the proverbial 30 cents when he has seen his spelling corrected by some young fellow who knew. For another 18 cents added to the 30 he feels like the employer might have a Webster's New Illustrated Dictionary at his side and feel at all times like 100 cents on the dollar.

If you have not begun to save the coupons found elsewhere in the paper begin today. Six of them put you in a way to get the dictionary.

Parisian Novelty

A Higher Climb

An electric railroad connecting two Mexican cities will climb to an altitude of 12,500 feet above sea level.

Indeed, Yes.

"You admit that you stole the man's automobile?" said the stern judge.

"Yes, your honor," replied the prisoner, with downcast eyes.

"And then you broke into a bank and stole money?"

"Why, yes, your honor. You know it takes money to keep an automobile, doncher?"

FRENCH FASHIONS

Absurd Creations Thrust Before Public by Clever Advertisers

A woman's magazine which is regarded as speaking with the authority of full knowledge of such matters, says that the so-called Paris fashions, which are aped on this side of the Atlantic, are only the extravagant and fantastic designs devised by certain dressmakers, who find it a good way of advertising.

No French lady, it says, would think of wearing such garb as women on this continent are told is the height of fashion. The women who wear these absurdities are the frequenters of race tracks whose social status is an unknown quantity.

The fact of the case seems to be that Paris dressmaking houses aim at keeping would-be fashionable womankind in a state of perennial excitement in regard to clothes. For this purpose they keep a staff of ingenious people at work designing something a little more absurd than something else, and there are always women who will wear them, especially when they have good figures to display and no particular reputation to lose. A neat trick of the trade is to employ a few people, who will stand in front of a window, in which some of the latest toggery is displayed, and make sketches of it, on the pretence that rival houses wish to have the designs.

There is perhaps nothing in the way of business that is worked up with more consummate skill or greater effrontery than the dissemination of so-called Paris fashions.

CONCRETE ROADS STRONGLY FAVORED

Everybody is building Concrete Roads

CONCRETE roads have literally taken Canada by storm. From Halifax to Vancouver, road commissions, town and county engineers, town councils and good roads associations, have been quick to discover the remarkable advantages of the concrete pavement. Its use, either for country highways, or for city streets, is so clearly the best solution of the good roads problem, that there has been little of the delay which usually accompanies the introduction of a comparatively new method.

Experiences such as the one which Mr. Hines reports are responsible for this rapid growth in popularity:—

An Authority's Statement

Extract from paper recently presented by Edward N. Hines, Chairman of the Board of County Road Commissioners, Wayne County, Mich., before the National Association of Cement Users, at Pittsburgh, Pa.

"It is a sad commentary on the conduct of an undertaking of any magnitude, that individuals, municipalities, states or nations, all seem to find it necessary to do a certain amount of experimenting and dilly-dallying before accepting the conclusions and avoiding the failures of previous demonstrations. This is particularly true of the various phases of the good roads movement.

"The initial cost of a good concrete road is little, if any, greater than that of a first-class bituminous road. One of the greatest fallacies indulged in by communities starting to improve their highways is that cheapness in cost of original construction of roads means economy and that the highway official who can build the greatest area of roads at the least outlay per square yard is working for the community's best interest.

"On one of the main highways out of Detroit, Grand River road, the first two miles is tar macadam. If someone had offered to build this road absolutely without one penny's cost to Wayne County, stipulating only that we should maintain it in a fairly average condition, at the end of eight years we would have been money ahead by rejecting the offer and building it of concrete under our present specifications. Of course, six years ago, when we built this road, we did not possess this knowledge, but our experience was one of the reasons for abandoning the construction of this type of road and turning to concrete. When it comes to annual cost, the concrete road stands pre-eminent. With more than 60 miles of concrete road in Wayne County, some of it in its fourth year, we have spent less than $300 on its surface for maintenance and this is what makes this type of road the cheapest of all roads."

Our Good Roads Lectures, illustrated with lantern slides showing photographs of roads of all kinds, and delivered by members of our own staff of road experts, will be given free of charge to town councils, road commissions, good roads associations, or any other organizations interested in better roads. If you are interested, and think your community would welcome a lecture engagement, write for full information and Good Roads literature to

THE DEVIL'S SOLILOQUY.

One night as the devil sat musing alone
In the midst of his cozy, warm fire,
And trying to figure the difference in guilt
'Tween a thief and an all around liar,
His memory turned to the scenes of his youth,
And his eyes filled with hot, boiling tears.
So he took down his ledger and turned to a page,
Dated back about six thousand years.

"I suppose," he said, as he glanced through the book,
"I am doing the best that I can.
For my business denotes a continual increase
Ever since the creation of man.
I've cribbed a good harvest for six thousand years,
And should be content with the yield,
And give my opponent permission to have
The gleanings I leave in the field.

"I gathered a very diversified crop
Of merchants and lawyers galore;
I've bound politicians in bundles until
Every one of my fingers is sore.
I've fiddlers, gamblers and insurance men,
I've murderers, forgers and liars,
And I've filled up the furnace with green Populists
Till they actually put out the fires.

"I've railroad conductors and doctors to spare,
Horse traders and preachers to spend,
Republicans, Democrats, Tories and Whigs,
And two or three newspaper men.
But there is one class, I am happy to say,
Can never gain entrance here—
Their souls are so dirty I am sure that they would,
Demoralize hell in a year.

"I refer to that thing, neither human nor beast—
The carrion crow of the world,
Who is never happy unless he can feast
On the wreck of an innocent girl.
A million of years in my warmest of rooms
His slander would never atone.
So I give him a match and advise him to start,
A select little hell of his own."

With his fingers he lit an asbestos cigar,
And, placing his book on the shelf,
He muttered: "I may be a bad man,
But I've got some respect for myself."

AN ENGLISH FLY-COP ? AFRAID OF FLY-SHOOTER

David Gribb was charged with using grossly insulting language to Mr. and Mrs. Sewell, at their house. Mr. Sewell said Gribb came to the house at 11.15 and told him and his wife he was going to "set them abaout." Sewell is an Englishman. He called them names reflecting on their parentage. Gribb said he had been on the police force in the old country, and, if brought to court, with his knowledge of law, would beat the witness. Defendant said the local police were afraid of him. He was examined by Mr. Gordon for the plaintiff, who is president of the local Checker League.

Mrs. Sewell, wife of plaintiff, 279 Sherbrooke street, said defendant stayed at their house from 11 to 1 a m.

Defendant saw plaintiff in the White House on Friday night. In the bar he told Sewell he did not think much of the Checker Club. Sewell invited him to go to his house. Neither he nor Sewell were strictly sober. Sewell, at his house, gave him half a bottle of beer. Gribb may possibly have been a "fly-cop" on the English police force, as he left when Sewell threatened to get a fly-shooter.

Mr. McElderry acted for the defendant. Mr. Gordon asked that Gribb be bound over to keep the peace. This was not granted but $7.50 in fine and costs was handed out.

SPORTING NEWS

RING.

New York, June 16.—Willie Ritchie and Joe Rivers will probably meet July 4 after all, now that Ritchie has withdrawn his demand for 134 pounds before ring time, and has consented to make the lightweight limit at that time.

Ritchie's desire to go in as a welterweight while his opponent was willing to fight as a lightweight, wasn't received with great favor by the Coast boxing fans. It was only a matter of a few pounds, but a champion should be ready at all times to defend his title at the right weight. If he can't do it he's no champion. Today the sporting world is wondering whether Ritchie has grown out of the glass or Nolan is getting in some more of the fine work he sprang on Joe Gans at Goldfield. On that occasion Nolan had iron-jawed arguments to prove that a champion must fight at 133 pounds ringside, in full ring costume. Nelson could make the weight easily, so Nolan forced poor Gans to weigh in with tights and shoes on. Now he twists his arguments to fit the other side. He'd made a good lawyer.

New York, June 16.—Members of the State Boxing Commission have received a suggestion that the sport be discontinued during the months of June, July and August, resting the fans up and also helping the sport. The suggestion has been favorably received and the chances are that it will be put into working order next year.

HYDROPLANE.

Boston, June 16.—Hickman's sea "sled" hit Boston harbor yesterday at a 45-mile clip, performed picturesque stunts with the ferries—then whisked out of sight. Hickman was at the wheel of his marine automobile arrayed in 60-cent jumper and overalls. Cap down tight over his face it has to be or Hickman would have been shorn of headgear. This sea sled comes from Pictou, N.S., and was making her first appearance in American waters. She aroused commotion along the waterfront —brought the populace down to the wharves like rats after a piper.

Hickman appeared with the sled about 3 P.M., entering the main ship channel just above Castle island. The sled stood on its hind legs, so to speak, with foam boiling to a height of three or four feet—higher than the heads of the marine chauffeur and his passenger in the very after part of the speed demon. Coat tails would have been frayed to a frazzle had they touched the race of brine churned out by the propeller, geared to a 50-horsepower motor, turning something like 1200 revolutions. olutions.

Hickman asked if the passenger's last testament was in safe hands, then handed him a long oil coat as protection from spray and oil. Everything being ready he jiggled a few levers and the sled began to coast like any "belly-bumper" on an icy hill and the water, when the craft was at maximum speed, was hard as any ice you ever saw. She's a departure, a novelty, in marine construction, because her lines are topsy-turvey compared with hydroplanes that most yachtsmen have seen. Yes, the sea sled had the harbor boiling and the crowd on tiptoe.

HOUSEBOATS.

6 Boston, June 16.—Cape Codders rubbed eyes yesterday when a vision proved partly real. Beachcombers discerned a craft for all the world like a wooden shoe. Masts had a peculiar rake and the bowsprit cocked up as if the stranger had broken her nose against some stubborn cliff. Children rushed back home with bulging eyes and declared Columbus had returned to rediscover America. It was so, for his ship was close by and headed toward Marm Hackett's garden. And people scurried to the tops of sand dunes and watched approach of the caravel, propelled by hidden power. Denizens of the Cape vowed to henceforth lead better lives when the 15th century craft slanted majestically across their vision and turned a new lead right then and there. They had seen "things" before, but here was the limit—a warning not to be scorned.

But the caravel didn't have Columbus glued to her poop praying for twigs and birds that would denote proximity of land. Instead, statuesque on the lofty after-eminence of the vessel stood H. A. Morss, member of the leading yacht club, and a seasoned deep-water yachtsman, conning his newly built houseboat Halcyon down toward the shoals bound for New London, where he plans to entertain his class at Tech and witness the college races, probably returning with the fleet in the invitation ocean race under auspices of the Eastern Yacht Club. The Halcyon is equipped with a powerful motor that gives speed of about nine miles an hour.

AVIATION.

New York, June 16.—Frederick C. Hild and C. M. Wood, aviators, were disqualified by the contest committee of the Aero Club of America for flying over the field of the Meadowbrook Hunt Club while the international polo game was in progress last Tuesday. Alan R. Hawley, president of the club and chairman of the contest committee, announced that, at an executive session the committee centured Hild and Wood and withdrew the license of Hild until Jan. 1 next and the license of Wood until Aug 1. Hild and Wood appeared before the committee.

SOME APPLE RECIPES

Baked Dumplings

Peel and core cooking apples, filling centers with sugar. Roll out biscuit dough rather thin and cut in squares large enough to cover apples. Place an apple in the center of each square; bring up the corners of the dough and fasten by pinching and twisting dough together. Place close together in baking pan. When it is full pour over them a syrup made with one pint of water and one pound of sugar, letting this come half way to the top of the dumplings. Place them in rather a brisk oven and bake about 40 minutes. If you like sprinkle cinnamon over the tops of the apples when they are cooked.

Cup Dumplings

Line baking cups with this pastry. Fill them up with slices of apple and sugar. Place on each cup a cover of pastry and put all in a large baking pan, pouring boiling water around the cups half way up. Bake in hot oven.

Bacon and Apples

This is a favorite southern dish. Slice bacon thin and fry till crisp. Put on platter and keep hot while you fry thick slices of unpeeled sweet apples in the bacon fat. When these are tender, drain and put in the center of a hot platter. Lay the fried bacon about the edge of the dish. Sprinkle sugar over the apples and serve.

Apple Tart

Mix apple sauce with 2 tablespoons apricot jam or orange and lemon marmalade. Fill a baking dish with it and finish as for apple custard pie, dotting the top with chopped citron or candied cherries. Or a simple meringue may be substituted.

Stewed Apples

Sometimes the only apple available is half ripe and rather insipid. In such a case it is possible to add to the flavor by employing a half cup or more of stoned, sliced dates and adding to each quart of partially stewed apples. Simmer the fruit together for about 6 minutes and set aside to cool. The grated rind of a lemon, or the juice of a lemon placed with the apples when first put on, varies the flavor also.

Apple Pancakes

Make a simple batter as you would for a batter pudding. Then add 2 heaping teaspoons of baking powder for each quart of flour used. Add 2 cups of very fine chopped apple for each quart of flour used. Cook as for ordinary griddle cakes.

Apple Sauce

To make the old-fashioned apple sauce, pare, core and quarter tart apples. At supper time place in a small crock on the back of the warm stove, pouring over the apples a pint of sugar dissolved in a cup of hot water. Cover the crock close. Let it stand till morning when the apples will be tender and may be served as breakfast food or set aside to be served at noon or night.

A Chef's Common Sense

Many housewives think that French chefs have notions which are too high flown to be of use to the ordinary home cook. "They have so much to do with," complains the home cook. "they are so used to working with large quantities of supplies that they know nothing of the needs of the home kitchen, where economy must be practiced."

Here is a hint from a chef which may well be put in practice by any home cook. When cutting tarts first stamp out the rings. Roll the trimmings into a ball, then roll them into a thin sheet with the rolling pin and stamp out the rounds to go under the rings. In this way there is no waste of crust. Yet do not most home cooks first stamp the rounds and then the rings, and leave much of the trimmings to take care of itself?

MATCHING A SLEEVE INTO THE ARMHOLE

Two Plans Can be Followed, Both Will Give Satisfaction if Proper Care is Used

"Is there any rule which may be depended on for putting sleeves into a waist correctly?"

The question is asked as often as there are seconds in a minute by women who try to do their own sewing. Unless you know how to put a sleeve into a waist it is one of the most baffling bits of work in the dressmaking art. Fortunately there is a general rule which usually works successfully if carefully followed. In fact, here are two good rules.

The average, normal-sized armhole measures from 14½ to 15½ inches. For this sized armhole the point for the front or inside seam of a sleeve is 2½ inches towards the front measuring from the under-arm seam of the waist toward the front. Put the seam to the armhole at that point. Then measure from the under-arm seam of the waist towards the front 1½ inches and pin the sleeve in at that point. Then measure again from the under-arm seam of the waist up towards the back 3½ inches and pin the sleeve there. Between the 1½ and 3½ points the sleeve is basted plain into the armhole, and the waist should be held towards you during this basting to preserve the curves.

Holding the sleeve next to you gather the remaining edge and baste into the armhole, distributing whatever gathers there may be, with perfect evenness.

The second rule is to crease the waist, on a warp thread, close to the armhole, beginning at the shoulder seam and extending to a short distance below the bottom of the armhole. Then crease on a warp thread close to the bottom of the armhole letting this crease cross by the first one. At the intersection of these creased lines make a third crease diagonally up to the armhole. Pin the inside seam of the sleeve at the point where the creased line touches the armhole. Follow the other measurements for basting the sleeve in.

To make a sleeve set right across the top, after it is stitched in and the seam finished, turn the seam towards the shoulder seam, and where there is a lining tack the seam edge to the lining for a distance of two or three inches across the top. Where there is no lining stitch it on the machine.

OPEN THE WINDOWS

Fresh Air the Best Tonic for That Tired Feeling

Cool, fresh air stimulates the brain. A warm room, above normal temperature, in which several persons have breathed the air over and over deadens the intelligence and mental activity just as it tires the physical body.

A class of children who have been growing duller and duller in mental comprehension in several successive classes can be stirred and awakened in five minutes if the teacher knows the cause of their mind weariness.

Fresh air from the open windows and brisk exercise in this new life-giving ozone will make new children of them.

Men and women who are closely housed in an illy-ventilated workshop, factory or store lose mental "snappiness" as the day wears on because the air supply is not sufficient. A woman who spends the greater part of her time housed up in a warm building or room gets the same brain-tired, listless look.

A student who is obliged to use his brain at night and feels the first signs of drowsiness creeping over him, invariably turns to the window for his salvation. He opens it wide, lets his room get cool and well-filled with fresh air, fills up his lungs and then goes to work again. His brain is awake again. The cool, fresh air has revived it.

If your brain feels tired and doesn't work as well as usual, size up the air supply; see if the windows are open.

Bleaching White Goods

Handkerchiefs and white clothes that have become yellow may be whitened in the following simple manner: After they have been washed in the usual way, lay them to soak overnight in clear water, into which cream of tartar has been put. A teaspoonful to a quart of water is the right proportion. When ironed they will be as white as snow.

Soot on Carpet

To clean soot from the carpet cover thickly with salt and you will be able to sweep it off without leaving smears or stain.

To Keep Suet

Suet will keep for weeks if covered with flour. After using a piece stick the part left over in the flour bin.

CLEAN OFF GLOBE AND START ANEW

Great Astronomer Thinks it Would be Justifiable—He Compares Mankind With Beings on Mars

"An outraged deity could wipe us off the surface of this earth, as a man cleans a dirty golf ball, and the universe wouldn't miss us, and I'm pretty sure it would be a good thing anyway to clean off all the life and all the institutions that human beings have created here and start the whole thing over again!"

"It was an astonishing picture the great Flammarion drew for his interviewer—the earth whirling, uninhabited, through space, as it did before man came; the winds blowing, but no living thing feeling them; then life stirring again, as it did before, probably as protoplasm; then, after hundreds of thousands or millions of years, man developing again to be the same that man is to-day, with all the evil things that Flammarion says he possesses? Perhaps, it is suggested, the new man might be more like the beings on Mars.

"I have reason to believe," Flammarion said, "that the beings who inhabit Mars are so far ahead of us in development that we could not understand their thoughts and principles any more than an ant or a bee or a dog can understand ours! It is possible that, for the past 10,000 years, the inhabitants of Mars have been trying to communicate with us and that their messages are reaching us, even now, by wireless, and that we are unable to understand or recognize them!

CAMILLE FLAMMARION

"The day will surely come when we shall talk with Mars! There is no doubt of that. But I'm afraid that, even if we could talk with Mars now, we wouldn't be able to grasp the thoughts of its inhabitants! We don't know enough. Why, we've had the wireless only for a few years. Even now we don't know its limitations. The telescope is only 300 years old with us and we haven't developed it to its full possibilities. I believe the people on Mars know a great deal about us, a great deal more than we know about them. Their civilization is perhaps 100,000 years or more ahead of ours!"

"Do you believe that God has anything to do with the progress of mankind?" was asked.

"You may call it god if you wish, but you are only naming the unknown power that placed this little atom, the earth, here in space among the millions of bigger atoms that we call planets. This power is all the God I know, and I don't even know that power. All I know is that space is here and that the planets and solar systems whirl in this space. As for our personal, individual selves, what do we count for? We are the tiniest atoms on this little speck which we call the earth. There are other globes, sailing through space, that would carry our earth on their sides like a football might carry a grain of sand!

"What egotists we are to believe that our little fleck is the only one on which intelligent beings dwell! Why would the power that started this great system moving, select our tiny ball for developing life in its highest and most intelligent form? Out of the millions of other balls, why should this power select ours? A bushel basket full of tiny peas, and we say that this pea, which we call earth, is the one that God chose upon which to exert His mightiest efforts! It is preposterous!"

Yew Nearly Extinct

The remnant of a primeval yew forest, about half a mile square, is carefully preserved in Bavaria, the tree, once widely distributed, being almost extinct in Europe.

While a man's heart is beating 70 times a horse's is pulsating but 40 times and an elephant's only 30.

Accidental Death

At the Hackney Coroner's Court, Dr. Guthrie informed a doctor, who gave evidence, that if a person is at the point of death, and receives a blow which accelerates death by two minutes, that is in law an accidental death.

Widen Their Jaws

Fifty New York schoolchildren are says the "Express," to have their jaws widened to improve their mental development. The doctor who recommended the treatment contends that a small lower jaw means small brain capacity.

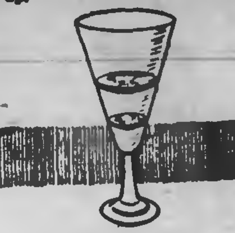
A FIENDISH GOVERNOR

Terrible Tortures Ascribed to Ruler of Persian Province

Dreadful tales of fiendish cruelty are told of the Governor of Tabriz by Edward Granville Brown, professor of Arabic, Cambridge university who desires the British government to interfere with a man whose sole delight is to torture and kill those of his subjects who profess an opposite political opinion to his own.

Shugand Dewla, governor of Tabriz, writes the professor, is a monster rather than a human being, taking a cold-blooded delight in hanging, stabbing and even cutting men in two like sheep, if he believes them to be unsatisfied with his rule. It is a common occurrence, continues Professor Brown, to see men lying in a dying condition in the streets of Tabriz with tongues cut out, eyes gouged from their sockets, and horse shoes nailed to their bare feet. Deaths through the plentiful application of the whip are common, and the professor asserts that the governor has been known to have the mouths of those he suspected of liberal principles sewn up.



A COIN TRICK

Take a tapering glass, say a wine glass, put a small coin, say a dime, in the glass, horizontally, and another larger coin, say a quarter, above it in a similar position. Then by blowing down into the glass the quarter will turn and the dime will jump out of the glass past it.

QUEER AFRICAN CAT

A peculiar member of the feline tribe has been added to the collection of animals in Toronto's Zoological Gardens. The animal in question is what is known as a civet cat, and was brought from Africa by Captain H. Reid, of Coomassine, Africa.

The cat has very long ears and tail, the latter being nearly 18 inches in length. The head is shaped somewhat like that of the common domestic cat, but is a little pointed. The eyes are yellow, the fur brownish grey, and the limbs rather short. It is no larger than the ordinary cat. It feeds on mice and birds.

USED AS WALLPAPER

Chinese of Newchang Have a Fancy for Old Daily Journals

The Trade and Commerce Department at Ottawa has received interesting information from his Majesty's consul at Newchang concerning cheap printing paper in China. It seems that in the customs statistics of Newchang for last year there appears as a separate item under the heading of paper an importation of 37,606 cwt. of old newspapers, valued at $14,618. These old newspapers, which appear to be mostly British, are in extensive demand in the Newchang district for wall paper for native houses and cottages.

The local Chinese newspapers have enormously increased their circulation during the year. This is doubtless the reason for greatly enhanced demand for printing paper, both of native and of foreign make of cheap quality.

EFFECT OF COLORS

French Physician Declares They Have Bearing Upon Diseases

Perfumes, colors and sounds affect us differently, according to the state of our health. The Chinese envelope smallpox patients in clothing of a carmine color. In Tonin and Australia bandages of the same color are used on children suffering from measles, while Spanish parents not only put their little patients in wrappings of this brilliant hue, but make them drink syrup of pomegranates because of its color.

Dr. Laumonier, writing in the Revue, assures the world that there is some sense in this. Red light has a good effect on several skin diseases; blue and violet spell death to bacteria; yellow protects the eye against the injurious elements of the spectrum; while green calms the nerves and encourages sleep.

FINEST WEDDING GIFT

Probably the most magnificent wedding present ever made was that of Cardinal Mazarin to Maria Theresa. It consisted of an entire dinner service of pure gold, two gorgeous state carriages, twelve of the finest horses procurable in Russia and Italy, and jewels that cost the donor a little more than six million dollars. The Cardinal gave each of his seven nieces a fortune on her marriage, and Saint Simon records the fact that in his will he left to one of his nephews-in-law nearly six millions dollars. The tapestries, books, paintings and furniture he left behind him are to-day the choicest treasures of many museums, and are fought for by the richest men in the world on the rare occasions when they come into the market.

New Use For Old Things

Empty spools and the flat tin disks that are frequently to be found as extra inside covers to lard pails make the finest sort of covers for small stewpans if a little cleverness is used in bringing the two together. The spool is sawed in half and is attached by a nail or a screw to the disk. The end of the nail or screw is battened on the under side of the disk and the cover is made. Being equipped with a wooden handle it will not be too hot to remove at any time.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith detains Thorne while the prisoner is sent for. An order comes from General Varney for Wilfred to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

Wilfrid Swept His Pen Through It.

She sat down at the desk, and as she scanned it, Wilfred watched her anxiously. To them Mrs. Varney entered. She had an open letter in one hand and a cap and belt in the other. She stopped in the doorway and motioned for some one in the hall to follow her, and an orderly entered the room. His uniform was covered with dust, his sunburned, grim face was covered with sweat and dust also. He stood in the doorway with the ease of a veteran soldier, that is without the painful effort to be precise or formal which marks the young aspirant for military honors.

"Wilfred," said Mrs. Varney, quickly approaching him, "here is a letter from your father." She extended the paper. "He sent it by his orderly."

Wilfred stepped closer to the elder woman while Caroline slowly rose from her chair, her eyes fixed on Mrs. Varney.

"What does he say, mother?" asked Wilfred.

"He says—" answered his mother with measured quietness, and controlling herself with the greatest difficulty, "he tells me that—that you—are—" in spite of her tremendous effort, her voice failed her. "Read it yourself, my boy," she whispered pitifully.

The letter was evidently exceedingly brief. A moment put Wilfred in possession of its contents. His mother stood with head averted. Caroline stared with trembling lips, a pale face, and a heaving bosom. It was to the orderly that Wilfred addressed himself.

"I am to go back with you?"

"General's orders, sir," answered the soldier, saluting, "to enter the service. God knows we need everybody now."

"When do we start?" asked Wilfred eagerly, his face flushing as he realized that his fondest desire was now to be gratified.

"I am ready now," said Wilfred. He turned to his mother. "You won't mind, mother," he said, his own lips trembling a little for the first time at the sight of her grief.

Mrs. Varney shook her head. She stepped nearer to him, smoothed the hair back from his forehead, and stretched out her arms to him as if she fain would embrace him, but she controlled herself and handed him the cap and belt.

"Your brother," she said slowly, "seems to be a little better. He wants you to take his cap and belt. I told him your father had sent for you, and I knew you would wish to go to the front at once."

Wilfred took the belt from her trembling hands, and buckled it about him. His mother handed him the cap.

"Howard says he can get another belt when he wants it, and you are to have his blankets, too. I will go and get them."

She turned and left the room. She was nearly at the end of her resisting power, and but for the welcome diversion incident to her departure, she could not have controlled herself longer. The last one! One taken, one trembling, and now Wilfred!

The boy entered into none of the emotions of his mother. He clapped the cap on his head and threw it back.

"Fits me just as if it were made for me," he said, settling the cap firmly in place. "Orderly, I will be with you in a jiffy."

"We won't have to send it now, will we?" he pointed to the letter.

Caroline, with a long, deep sigh, shook her head, and slowly handed the letter to him. Wilfred took it mechanically, his eyes fixed on the girl, who had suddenly grown very white of face, trembly of lip, and teary of eye-lashes.

"You are very good," he said, tearing the letter into pieces, "to help me like you did."

"It was nothing," whispered the girl.

"You can help me again, if you want to."

Caroline lifted her eyes to his face, and he saw within their depths that which encouraged him.

"I can fight twice as well, if—"

Poor little Caroline couldn't trust herself to speak. She nodded through her tears.

"Good-bye," said Wilfred, "you will write to me about helping me to fight twice as well, won't you. You know what I mean?"

Caroline nodded again.

"I wouldn't mind if you telegraphed me that you would."

What might have happened further will never be determined, for at this juncture Mrs. Varney came back with an old faded blanket tied in a roll. She handed it to the boy without speaking. Wilfred threw it over his shoulder, and kissed his mother hurriedly.

"You won't mind much, will you, mother. I will soon be back. Orderly!" he cried.

"Sir."

"I am ready," said Wilfred.

He threw one long, meaning look at Caroline, and followed the soldier out of the door and across the hall. The opening and closing of an outside door was heard, and then all was still. Mrs. Varney held her hand to her heart, and long, shuddering breaths came from her. He might soon be back, but how. She knew all about the famous injunction of the Spartan woman, "With your shield or on it," but somehow she had no idea of the full significance until it came to her last boy, and for a moment she was forgetful of poor, little Caroline until she saw the girl wavering toward the door, and there was no disguise about the real tears in her eyes now.

"Are you going, dear?" asked Mrs. Varney, forcing herself to speak.

Caroline nodded her head as before.

"Oh, yes," continued the older woman, "your party, you have to be there."

At that the girl found voice, and without looking back she murmured: "There won't be any party tonight."

CHAPTER VIII.

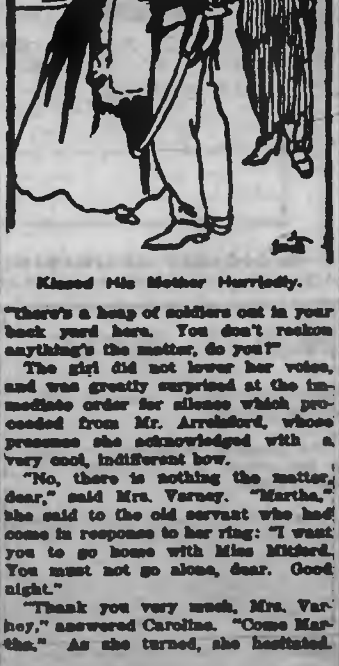
Edith Is Forced to Play the Game.

Caroline's departure was again interrupted by the inopportune re-entrance from the back hall of Mr. Arrelsford, who was accompanied by two soldiers, whom he directed to remain by the door. As he advanced rapidly toward Mrs. Varney, Caroline stepped aside toward the rear window.

"Is he—" began Arrelsford, turning toward the window, and starting back in surprise as he observed Caroline for the first time.

"Yes, he is there," answered the woman.

"Oh, Mrs. Varney," cried Caroline, "there's a heap of soldiers out in your back yard here. You don't reckon anything's the matter, do you?"



Kissed His Mother Hurriedly.

The girl did not lower her voice, and was greatly surprised at the immediate order for silence which proceeded from Mr. Arrelsford, whose presence she acknowledged with a very cool, indifferent bow.

"No, there is nothing the matter, dear," said Mrs. Varney. "Martha," she said to the old servant who had come in response to her ring: "I want you to go home with Miss Mitford. You must not go alone, dear. Good night."

"Thank you very much, Mrs. Varney," answered Caroline. "Come Martha." As she turned, she hesitated.

"You don't reckon she could go with me somewhere else, do you?"

"Why, where else do you want to go at this hour, my dear girl?" asked Mrs. Varney.

"Just to—to the telegraph office," answered Caroline.

Mr. Arrelsford, who had been waiting with ill-concealed impatience during this dialogue, started violently.

"Now!" exclaimed Mrs. Varney in great surprise, not noticing the actions of her latest guest. "At this time of night?"

"Yes," answered Caroline, "it is on very important business, and —I—"

"Oh," returned Mrs. Varney, "if that is the case, Martha must go with you."

"You know we haven't a single servant left at our house," Caroline said in explanation of her request.

"I know," said Mrs. Varney, "and, Martha, don't leave her for an instant."

As soon as she had left the room, passing between the two soldiers, Arrelsford took up the conversation. He spoke quickly and in a sharp voice. He was evidently greatly excited.

"What is she going to do at the telegraph office?" he asked.

"I have no idea," answered the woman.

"Has she had any conversation with him?" said Arrelsford, pointing to the front of the house.

"They were talking together in this room early this evening before you came the first time, but it isn't possible she could—"

"I'm determined to suspect everybody, and leave no stone unturned to prevent the failure of his plans. "Corporal," he cried, "have Eddinger follow that girl. He must get to the telegraph office as soon as she does, and don't let any dispatch she tries to send get out before I see it. Let her give it in, but hold it. Make no mistake about that. Get an order from the department for you to bring it to me." As the corporal saluted and turned away to give the order, Arrelsford faced Mrs. Varney again. "Are they both out there?"

"Yes," answered the woman. "Did you bring the man from Libby prison?"

"I did, the guards have him out in the street on the other side of the house. When we get Thorne in here alone I'll have him brought over to that window and shoved into the room."

"And where shall I stay?"

"Out there," said Arrelsford, "by the lower door, opening upon the back hall. You can get a good view of everything from there."

"But if he sees me?"

"He won't see you if it is dark in the hall." He turned to the corporal who had re-entered and resumed his station. "Turn out those lights out there," he said. "We can close these curtains, can't we?"

"Certainly," said Mrs. Varney, opening the rear door and drawing the heavy portieres, but leaving space between them so that anyone in the dark hall could see through them but not be seen from the room.

"I don't want too much light in here, either," said Arrelsford. As he spoke he blew out the candles in the [illegible] candelabra which had been placed on the different tables, and left the large, long room but dimly illuminated by the candles in the sconces on the walls.

Mrs. Varney watched him with fascinated awe. In spite of herself there still lingered a hope that Arrelsford might be mistaken. Thorne had enlisted her interest, and he might under other conditions have aroused her matronly affections, and she was hoping against hope that he might yet prove himself innocent, not only because of his personality but as well because the thought that she might have entertained a spy was repugnant to her, and because of the honor of the Dumont family, which was one of the oldest and most important ones in the western hills of the Old Dominion.

Arrelsford meantime completed his preparations by moving the couch which Caroline Mitford had placed before the window back to the wall.

"Now, Mrs. Varney," he said, stepping far back out of sight of the window, "will you open the curtains? Do it casually, carelessly, please, so as not to awaken any suspicion if you are seen."

"But your soldiers, won't they—"

"They are all at the back of the house. They came in the back way, and the field in front is absolutely clear, although I have men concealed in the street to stop anyone who may attempt to escape that way."

Mrs. Varney walked over to the window and drew back the curtains. She stood for a moment looking out into the clear, peaceful quietness of a soft spring night. The moon was full, and being somewhat low shone through the long windows and into the room, the candle light not being bright enough to dim its radiance. Her task being completed, she turned, and once more the man who was in command pointed across the hall toward the room on the other side.

"Are those women in there yet?" he asked peremptorily.

"Yes."

"Where is the key?"

Mrs. Varney left the room and went to the door.

"It is on this side," she said.

"Will you lock it, please?"

The woman softly turned the key in the lock, and returned to the drawing room without a sound. As she did so the noise of the opening of one of the long French windows in the front of the room attracted the attention of both of them. Edith Varney entered the room nervously and stepped forward. She began breathlessly, in a low, feverishly excited voice.

"Mamma!"

Mrs. Varney hurried toward her and caught her outstretched hand.

"I want to speak to you," whispered the girl.

"We can't wait," said Arrelsford, stepping forward.

"You must," persisted the girl. She turned to her mother again. "I can't do it, I can't! Oh, let me go!"

"But, my dear," said her mother, "you were the one who suggested that—"

"But I was sure then, and now—"

"Has he confessed?" asked Mrs. Varney.

"No, no," answered the girl with a glance of fear and apprehension toward Arrelsford, who stood staring menacingly at her elbow.

"Don't speak so loud," whispered the secret service agent.

"Edith," said her mother soothingly, "what is it that has changed you?"

"I Don't Want Too Much Light in Here."

She waited for an answer, but none came. The girl's face had been very pale, but it now flushed suddenly with color.

"Dear," said her mother, "you must tell me—"

EXPERIENCE WITH Sanol's Remedies

THE SANOL MFG. CO.,
WINNIPEG.
Jan. 22, 1912.

Dear Sirs.—

In regard to the sale of SANOL & SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, I might say I have been handling the goods for about three months. I was obliged to put in SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES to supply one of my customers, who is now completely cured, and whom, I believe, has sent a testimonial to your office. Another customer ordered SANOL and I was obliged to stock it. This gentleman was so well satisfied that he has sent bottles to his friends. Up to this time I had never really taken much interest in the preparations but when customer after customer would come in and tell me about what SANOL had done for them, I came to the conclusion it would be worth my while getting behind SANOL and recommending it to my customers. This I have done and I have heard nothing but words of praise for SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, I am.

Yours truly,
F. J. H. HAMLYN,

TURKISH WORDS

"Sublime Porte" is one of those European expressions for Turkish institutions which are never used by the Turks themselves. The Ottoman Government's official title for itself is Hukyumet-i-seniye, the glorious Government.

Turks do not speak of "the Sultan," but of the "Padisha," a Persian term meaning the father of monarchs.

Turkey is a geographical expression used outside the land it denotes but unknown to those who dwell in it. The Turks talk of Rumelia Anadol. The foreign residents may speak of Anatolia, Albania or the Lebanon. They will tell you that they live at Smyrna, Salonica or Beyrout or elsewhere, but the word Turkey never crosses their lips. In the realm itself there is no collective name for the territory of the Sultan.

Albania, Bulgaria and Roumania, although contiguous to one another, speak three totally different languages. The Bulgarian tongue is that of ancient Russia, and Roumanian resembles that of ancient Rome more closely than modern Italian does. Albanian has no marked affinity with any other language, though philologists have discovered in it some slight traces of Basque and Hungarian influence.

DISARMING THE GODS

How Chinese, Japanese and Hindoo Boys Prepare for School Life

Among the eastern nations the beginning of school life is a critical time for the child. The priest or astrologer must be consulted to choose a lucky day. Every precaution must be taken to avert the jealousy of the gods, whose malice is especially directed against a fine boy.

The Chinese father who adores his son, will take the utmost pains to convince the powers of the air that the boy is of no account. The child may be given a despicable name, like flea or chutse, a pig; or, more insulting still, he may be given a girl's name. The boy may be started off to school wearing a girl's dress and one earring, and if the deception is complete this will be the most effectual of all, for even the gods do not care for girls in China.

The Japanese schoolboy wears hanging from his belt a little red bag containing a brass tag with his name and his parents' name and address upon it. He must have his paper umbrella and his fan, and in a gray bag upon his arm is a jar of rice for his luncheon. This quaint little fellow has probably made his offering at his own private shrine to Tenjiusen, the god of penmanship.

When the Hindoo boy has found an auspicious day to begin school he is taken to the god of learning, Sarasvati. Here the little supplicant presents his offerings of rice and betel nuts and repeats the letters of the alphabet after the priest. Thus he is entered into the ways of knowledge in the very presence of the god.—Ex.

TWIN FRYING PAN

Can be Used as Two Pans Joined Together as One

A cooking utensil which is a sort of twin frying pan has been designed by an Illinois woman. Each of the pans forms half of the circle one regular pan would make and they slide into each other, as it were, at their straight sides. One of the receptacles has a longitudinally slotted member which holds a tubular member on the other. A hinge is thus formed, upon which the pans rotate so when they are joined the cook must use both handles to lift them or one will turn over and spill the contents. Of course, this utensil can readily be converted into two by sliding the sections apart and using them separately. Each is provided with its own handle, as has been said, and each has its own spout.

FEWER TIPS GIVEN

Sums Sent Back to England by Sailors at Montreal are Dwindling

That trans-Atlantic passengers are not as generous as formerly in the matter of tips and that the amount of money sent back to England by sailors is correspondingly smaller than usual, is the statement made by Mr. Ritchie Bell, manager of the Montreal Sailors' Institute.

In substantiation of this argument Mr. Bell pointed out that this year only $14,000 was sent away from the Institute, as against $17,000 last year. The amount of English tip money changed into Canadian currency dwindled from $3,250 last year to little more than $2,000 this season.

Moreover, the amount of money given the Institute officials for safe keeping was only $1,700 this year, compared to $2,600 for the same period last year.

On the other hand, the attendance at weekly concerts increased by more than 1,000, the number of letters written from the Institute also showed an increase. Other figures denoted an advance in the number of seamen attending temperance and religious services.

The secret of frying fish crisp and brown, without either eggs or bread crumbs, is to dry it well, dredge both sides with plenty of flour and plunge it into boiling fat. Be sure the fat is boiling and that there is plenty of it.

Lace curtains should soak for two hours before washing in cold water to which a little borax has been added. They are much easier to wash after-

Are You Droopy, Tired, Worn Out?

HERE IS GOOD ADVICE TO ALL WHO FEEL AS IF THEIR VIGOR AND LIFE ALL OOZED AWAY.

This Condition Can be Quickly Cured by a Good Cleansing Medicine.

Your experience is probably somewhat similar to that described by Mr. J. T. Fleming in the following letter from his home in Lebanon: "I think I must have the most sluggish sort of a liver. In the morning my mouth was bitter, and that foul, soft feeling that tells you, "No breakfast needed here this morning.' A cup of coffee would sort of brace me up, but in two hours I was disposed to quit work, all energy having oozed out of me. Supper was my only good meal, but I guess I didn't digest very well, for I dreamt to beat the band. A friend of mine put me wise to Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I think they must have taken hold of my liver, perhaps my stomach, too, because at the very start they made things go right. Look at me now—not sleepy in the daytime, but hustling for the mighty dollar and getting fun out of life every minute. That's what Dr. Hamilton's Pills have done for me—they rebuilt and rejuvenated my entire system."

To keep free from headaches, to feel young and bright, to enjoy your meals, to sleep sound and look your best, nothing can help like Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, five for $1.00 at all druggists and storekeepers or postpaid from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

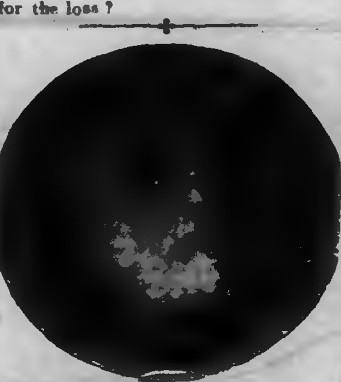
Morton purchased several lots at 12c Two bids only were turned down at 12c and 11⅞.

The "Warder" Got Jealous.

The town of Lindsay recently decided to issue some circulars. This work was done at - Toronto office and proofs submitted. The "Warder" thought it recognized the type as being that of a Peterborough paper and raised a hullabaloo because Peterborough got the job. The Warder man might invest in new specs, or instal a more complete outfit, that he can do the work and not be a victim of the green eyed monster, jealousy.

Auto Puts Stone Through Window.

A strange accident to the plate glass window of Mr. F. M. McRae's gent's furnishing store, Beaverton, occurred Friday, when a stone dislodged from the road by a wheel of the automobile of Mr. J. W. Cowan, shot through the window, smashing it to pieces in the impact. The window is valued at $8.00, and, we understand, was not insured. The question now arises, who is responsible for the loss?



MR. H. CALCUTT
Who Died Yesterday.

There Are Others.

Belleville Ontario: A farmer was taken to the police station at Belleville yesterday by Inspector Arnott, who had had some butter weighed, One of the rolls weighed 14½ and another 15½ ozs. These were sold for pound rolls. The man Adam-like put the blame on his wife, exonerating himself, saying the scales must be wrong at home. His wife did not use the market weight. Magistrate Masson warned the husband and wife, who went out rejoicing at their freedom.

Former Local Citizen Makes Good

The many friends of Mr. George Stethem, who formerly conducted a large hardware store on George St., in the premises now occupied by Messrs. Grafton & Co., and later on Hunter street, will be pleased to learn that this former local citizen has made a small fortune in real estate transactions at Fort Frances. His son, Archie has also made a large amount of money through similar agency in the same place.

A Neglected Subpoena.

Mr. Mahood, of East City, when asked, at yesterday's police court, why he was not present on Saturday although subpoened, said he could not come as he had an unfinished contract to complete. The magistrate said when a man is subpoened he must drop his work and be in court. Joshua Currie, the defendant, charged with allowing cows to run at large, summonsed on Mahood's information, was fined $2 and costs.

First Day's Fishing Here.

Just as the eastern sun rose above St. Joseph's Hospital yesterday morning, the south side of Hunter street bridge looked like the "thin red line" at Waterloo. There were fat men, thin men, rich men, poor men, affinity chasers and second beaters, each armed with a rod, looking for bass. They all agreed, as the bass were evidently in the deep water, that the man who put the stop logs in the dam above, lowering that part of the Otonabee, was a sam or ham or some such kind of mota man.

Pinched as Released.

Henry Meehan was charged with being a vagrant. Meehan said last week he had sent money to his wife. Chief Thompson said he had enquired at the post office and said Meehan had sent no money. The Chief, when His Worship said Mullen could go, provided he left town at once, provided evidence of an old unpaid fine registered against the prisoner. Meehan was held on account of the fine. $8.

The deceased gentleman was 53 years of age, and was born in Dummer Township. Over 30 years ago he moved to Apsley, where he had resided ever since. He was a highly respected and widely known resident of the community, and a large number of friends will be sorry to learn of his demise.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIRS VANISH LIKE MAGIC

(Beauty Culture.)

A thick, paste made of powdered delatone and water and applied to any hairy surface for 2 or 3 minutes, then rubbed off, takes the hairs with it. The skin should then be washed to entirely remove the delatone and it will be absolutely free from every trace of hair or fuzz. This is an easy, inexpensive method of removing hairs and is entirely devoid of pain. Using the delatone will in no way mar or injure the skin.

Thick, glossy eyebrows and long silken, curly lashes add greatly to personal beauty. Frequently applications of pyroxin to brows or applied at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger will produce the above results, but care should be used to not get pyroxin where no hair is wanted.

CANADIAN PACIFIC GREAT LAKES EXPRESS STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Few people realize with what ease and speed a trip from the East to Fort William and Winnipeg, can be made via the Canadian Pacific Great Lakes Express Steamships. Stop for a moment and consider that you can leave Toronto at 12.45 noon on Tuesday or Saturday and arrive in Winnipeg at 9.40 p.m. Thursday or Monday. Fifty-seven hours from Toronto to Winnipeg; twelve hours faster than any other service. For those who wish to leave on different days in the week, and have a little more time on the water, the trip can be made leaving Toronto at 12.45 noon on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, arriving in Winnipeg at 11.40 a.m. on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays.

Think of a steamship service five days each week across the Great Lakes. The steamships are built and furnished to give the very best comfort that marine architecture can devise and the cuisine is the result of years of studied effort and experience, and is, needless to says, the best.

Preserving Power

There are about 300 electric stations in the United States equipped with ice making plants to profitably utilize the surplus power in the summer months.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

CITY BELFAST ASKS DIVINE AID IN HOME RULE ROW

City On Its Knees in Prayer--Called Roundheads of the Twentieth Century

London, June 17.—James Douglass, well known Radical writer, having just revisited Belfast, says in The Ministerial Daily News: "This moment the city is on its knees, not to man, but to God. The simple folk with whom I talked are not politicians. They are Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Friends.

They are filled with a mystical faith in God; they believe He will by some path lead them out of their darkness. The city is a city of prayer. There are dregs at the bottom of this vessel of piety; there is scum on the top of it, but the governing truth is, as I stated that Belfast is a puritan city, almost a Cromwellian city.

The men we have to persuade are not rough rowdies who throw stones and bludgeon the Catholics, but Ironsides on their knees, whose battle hymn in that great chant "Oh God our Help in Ages Past."

To some it may seem a surly hymn.

They may despise as hypocrites these roundheads of the twentieth century, but its passion is in our blood as well as theirs.

As it sounds in our ears it behooves us to strive to the last to find peace, that all Irishmen may tread together as brothers, and as comrades and Christians."

FRIEDMANN GOES BACK TO GERMANY

New York, June 17.—Dr. Fredrich F Friedmann, the Berlin physician who announced several months ago that he had a cure for tuberculosis, sailed for home to-day. His institute here was closed lately, after the Board of Health had forbidden the use of his vaccine. The doctor did not say whether he would return.

GERMAN EMPRESS TIRED BY TOO MUCH FESTIVITY

Her Majesty Obliged to Leave Imperial Box at Gala Performance--Heavy Strain of Last Few Days Events Followed Her Only Daughter's Wedding

Berlin, June 17.—The Empress Augusta Victoria did not participate in to-day's festivities in connection with the celebration of the completion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of her husband's reign. The events of the last few days, following on heavy strain of ceremonies accompanying her only daughter's wedding have proved too much for her strength and she was forced to leave the imperial box at the opera in the middle of last evening's gala performance.

To-day's celebration, which was again favored by splendid weather, opened with a parade organized by the trades unions. It was reviewed by the Emperor from his castle. Only 10,000 participated, but the parade was imposing and interesting owing to the hundreds of floats emblematic of the various trades.

The streets appeared to be even more crowded to-day than yesterday, the spectators having much more to see in the workmen's parade, the State processions of the German rulers to the castle and to-night's procession of the students of the Berlin University.

SHE WOULD DIE TO ASSIST CAUSE, AND REMAINS REBEL

Militant Makes Impassioned Speech in Court at Trial of Seven

London, Bune 17.—An impassioned speech in defence of the outrages committed by militant suffragettes was delivered to-day in the central criminal court by Miss Annie Kenney, during the trial for conspiracy of the suffragette leades. Her address seated to enliven the proceedings and her concluding words created a great impression. She uttered the [illegible] asseveradon:

"If I have got to die to get the vote I will die, whatever the verdict of the jury may be to-day."

Says Women Have Cause.

Miss Annie Kenney devoted much of her speech for the defence to attempts to prove that the action of the Ulster Unionists and the speeches of Cabinet Ministers—who she averred had asserted that the un-enfranchised were justified in rebelling in order to get their grievances remedied—furnished ample warrant for the course pursued by the militant suffragettes. If further justification were necessary she said "the trickery and treachery of Cabinet Ministers, who had hunted and hounded the women from pillar to post" supplied it.

Has "Black" Record.

The present Government, she contended, had a blacker record in the question of women suffrage than any other. It had treated the aspirations of the women more abominably than any British Government had done since [illegible]7. As for herself she belonged to the working classes. At the age of [illegible] she said she was a half timer in a factory and she had joined the suffrage movement because of the terribly cruel conditions under which women worked in the British Isles. She added:

"I am a [illegible] and a rebel I shall remain until women receive the vote. If like Miss Emily Wilding Davison it should be necessary for me to sacrifice my life then I shall die."

COUNTY COUNCIL IN THE JUNE SESSION

In his address to the Council Warden Garbutt asked that the members give their serious consideration to county roads and the improvement of the various highways. The chairman of the [illegible] Committee, he said, had authorized the preparation of a statement showing the amount of assets to the county as a result of bridge construction

Warden Garbutt also referred to the death of the late Mr. B. Leahy and suggested that council pass a resolution of their condolence, and forward a copy to his widow and family.

On behalf of the council he welcomed Mr. Walsh, a new member for Douro.

COL. ASTOR LEFT 87 MILLIONS

New York, June 17.—The estate of Col. Cohn Jacob Astor, who perished in the Titanic disaster, was officially appraised this afternoon at $86,966,611, of which Vincent Astor receives $68,964,499; Mrs. Madeline Force Astor, $7,678,896; Muriel Astor, $4,856,768, and John Jacob Astor, son by his second marriage, $9,982,672.

The estate is declared to be the largest ever appraised in this country. Aside from the announcement of the amounts that revert to the heirs, there are two outstanding features of interest. One is an affidavit of the examiners that the property embraced in the ante-nuptial agreement for Mrs. Ava Willing Astor, amounting to about $1,728,000, which was to have reverted to her at the time of her husband's death now terminates and goes to Vincent Astor, for the reason that the youth's mother, although once Col. Astor's wife, was never his widow. Mrs. Ava Willing Astor divorced her husband whose legal widow is Mrs. Madeline Force Astor.

The second feature concerns the inheritance tax of Col. Astor. The estate saved a large sum of money by paying $3,150,000 to the state last October, within six months of Col. Astor's death, this payment earning a 5 per cent. rebate. The sum mentioned greatly exceeds any amount ever paid to any state as an inheritance tax, it is declared.

The appraisers placed the real estate value at about $63,100,000, and the value of the personal property close on to $25,000,000.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Easterly winds and a little cooler.

RATHER A SETBACK FOR MR. ST. CLAIR

Toronto, June 17.—"There is absolutely no evidence against this woman," was the remark of Magistrate Kingsford by which he calmly disposed of the testimony of Mr. R. B. St. Clair, who appeared in the Woman's Court this morning to give evidence against Mary Lewis.

Miss Lewis is a woman of color, whose arrest was caused late last night by Mr. St. Clair, who complained to the police that he saw the woman accost a man on the street. This morning Mary was able to prove to the court that she has a situation and is working and she strongly denied the imputations of Mr. St. Clair.

The evidence of the complainant was received by the court, but Magistrate Kingsford preferred the evidence of the accused.

FIRE FIGHTERS RAN NINE MILES IN BUSH

New Liskeard, Ont., June 07.—Making a run of nine miles, the New Liskeard fire brigade saved the mill and property of Campbell & Son in Hudson township from bushfires yesterday evening after one million feet of rough lumber had been destroyed. The heavy fire engine was pulled out to the scene and ha[illegible] brigade with hose followed. The loss will be nearly $20,000 and included some of the buildings, although the mill itself and the greater proportion of the lumber was saved by the fire brigade, which worked until six this morning. Bush fires raged all through the north country yesterday, although reports from outlying districts do not tell of any great damage being done and so far as the meagre reports show very few settlers lost in yesterday's fires.

REV MR. DEAN HITS OUT RIGHT AND LEFT VIGOROUSLY

Methodist Conference Passed a Resolution Against Separate Schools

That was as far as one of the delegates at the Toronto Conference got this morning when he rose to object to a resolution moved by Rev. Mr. Dean of the Fred Victor Mission to the effect that "this Conference is unalterably opposed to Separate Schools as being a menace to free institutions and a danger to Protestantism."

"We can advise the Government, brother," cried the chairman, rising, "let Mr. Dean go on

"Hear, hear," exclaimed others in chorus, and the resolution was read, entire, moved, seconded and carried.

Mr. Dean, however, was full of resolutions, and he did not confine his condemnation solely to Roman Catholics. He smote even the Methodists themselves.

Posted on the Theatre.

First, he told the conference that he knew more about Toronto theatres than even Rev. John Coburn, secretary of the Committee of Forty.

"I have been to shows," he said, "which Mr. Coburn has seen, and to some shows Mr. Coburn has not seen. And I would advise more Methodists to go to the theatres and see for themselves the poison to morality which is being given to our people, young and old. Then we would soon have clean theatres.

Then Mr. Dean moved a resolution against the resolution passed yesterday afternoon by the conference fixing a certain age as "the age of consent" in social vice.

Calls It Contradictory.

"That resolution is contradictory" he exclaimed. Yesterday we condemned social vice as criminal and immoral and then we worded our resolution against it by determining that age should be regarded as the age of consent."

PETERBORO EXAMINER IS BOOMING COUNCIL

We notice in an esteemed evening contemporary of last night, that the "County Council opened THIB morning at 2.30 o'clock." The Times has always been aware that farmers true to their principle of early to bed, early to rise, etc. get up as the sun bathes the eastern side of stumps and fence rails in golden glow, but it is interesting to find from the Examiner that the County Fathers begin their municipal work at 2.30 a.m.

SPANISH SHIP KILLS 19 MOORS, WOUNDS 60

Alhucemas, Morocco, June 17. — Nineteen Moorish soldiers were killed and sixty wounded in a single volley fired by the Spanish cruiser Reina Regente, according to an official dispatch received here today. It says:

"Large party of Moors boarded the Spanish gunboat General Concha after the crew had been taken off when she went ashore Thursday near here. They were pillaging the vessel when the cruiser Reina Regente came up and fired her entire broadside among them, killing nineteen and wounding sixty."

ROOSEVELT MAY GO ROUND THE WORLD

New York, June 17.—When Colonel Roosevelt goes to the Argentine Republic on a lecture trip in the fall, he may extend it to a trip around the world, which will keep him away from America for two years. There was an unconfirmed rumor that the colonel had made up his mind to lecture in all the South American republics, then go to Australia, and from there to China, Japan and Russia. If the colonel takes the trip, he will not return until late in the fall of 1915, which is not many months before the time when candidates will be selected for the Presidency in 1916.

THE KNOPP'S DIAMONDS WILL BE SOLD JULY 20

"It can't be done.-'

That's what rancois Knopp, of Antwerp, Belgium, probably thinks of all attempts to bring jewelry into the United States without first settling with the customs agents.

A want ad signed by United States Marshal Victor Loisel is the sequel of the alleged attempt of Mr. Knopp to smuggle goods through the boundary lines. The add reads that "On July 20 at the Canal street entrance of the Custom House, I will sell for cash, one diamond brooch, one ruby brooch, one ruby ring, one diamond one diamond pin and one pearl pin.

(Signed) "VICTOR LOISEL."

Knopp was arrested a year ago by agents of the customs department, after he had landed from Antwerp, in New York, and made his way by rail to New Orleans. A search of his effects revealed the jewelry named, which the agent declared to be contraband. It was confiscated and Knopp placed under bond. He has never been tried but the required time having elapsed, according to law, the jewelry will be sold to the highest bidder.

Now that the customs department have an opportunity to receive the proper duty from the sale of the jewelry, Marshal Loisel says that its perfectly safe to own. He also adds that his terms are cash.

DOCTOR IS SHOT 6 TIMES, DIES, WIDOW USED GUN

Daughter of Savannah Boardinghouse Keeper Slays Society Physician

Savannah, Ga., Cune 17.—Dr. Guy O- Blinkley, a physician of this city was shot to death in his office here last night by Eugene H. Whisnant, a widow, who, after firing six shots at the physician, sent a seventh bullet through her temple, falling lifeless across the body of her victim.

The police are searching for an unknown woman, who is said to have accompanied Mrs. Whisnant to the doctor's office.

Dr. Blinkley, who was 45 years old and unmarried, came here about seven years ago from Suffolk, Va. He was popular socially and professionally. Mrs. Whisnant, aged 28, was the daughter of a Savannah boarding-house keeper. No cause has been assigned for the tragedy.

Then the Firing Began.

It is said that when Mrs. Whisnant and her companion reached the doctor's office, the former went with Dr. Blinkley into his private office, the other woman remaining in the outer office. A few minutes later the firing began and Dr. Blinkley rushed out, followed by Mrs. Whisnant who was steadily firing. Dr. Blinkley called to a maid to summon the police, Mrs. Whisnant is said to have pursued the doctor to the porch and back into the office, continuing firing at him. Her sixth shot entered his heart, killing him instantly. The woman then shot herself through the head.

REBELLIOUS MOROS COMPLETELY ROUTED

Manila, June 17.—Complete rout of the rebellious Moros on Mount Bagsag, was accomplished by the American forces during the night with the loss of six men killed and seven wounded.

Reports of the engagement, reaching here by wireless from the Island of Jolo, are meagre. All of the Americans are scouts. In the first advance upon the mountain of last week, when the Moros were nearly dislodged from their positions, six Americans were killed. The number of dead among the Moros is not known.

Last night's battle began just before dark. The fighting was fierce, but the American advance was so determined that the Moros at last stole away and left the mountain clear. They are now at large and will be pursued ceaselessly.

Bragadier-General John J. Perching, commanding the department of Mindano, is leading for forces and is enthusiastic in praise of the conduct of his men.

TORONTO WOMEN SUGGEST A CITY VICE COMMISSION

Many Prominent Men Consent to Safeguard the Public Morals

Toronto, June 17.—The Local Council of Women again waited on the Board of Control to-day to submit their recommendations as to the personnel of the proposed vice Commission to be constituted by Council for the purpose of conducting a survey of Toronto's moral conditions.

Another conference will be held with the Board of Control next Tuesday, when the ladies will submit a revised list, including at the request of the board, a larger number of representatives from their own body. City Solicitor Johnston in the meantime will be asked after consultation with Mrs. Huestis and her co-workers, to prepare a draft by-law or formulate a definite proposition to lay before Council. Mrs. Huestis stated that the Chicago vice commission's report cost $5,000, and suggested that without making any comparison between the conditions existing in the two cities and on the basis of size alone, probably half that sum would be sufficient in Toronto.

The Commission.

The following names have all been endorsed by the Council of Women, and have consented to act provisionally upon the City Council confirmation:

BOMB IN H. M. MAIL AND WOMAN'S SISTER MAY DIE

Sherbrooke Wife Victim of Internal Machine--Police Have No Clue

Sherbrooke, Que., June 17.—An infernal machine sent through the mails, when opened this morning, killed Mrs. Bilodeau and mortally wounded Miss Bilodeau, her sister-in-law.

The infernal machine was delivered in the ordinary way at noon. Mrs. Bilodeau was proceeding to open it when the parcel exploded, and Mrs. Bilodeau fell to the floor, terribly injured, death coming to her instantaneously. Miss Bilodeau, who was with her sister-in-law at the time the parcel arrived, was hurled across the room by the explosion and in addition to bad injuries about the body had one arm completely blown off.

Miss Bilodeau was hurried to the hospital, where it was said that she will not recover.

Bomb Is Destroyed.

No motive has so far been unearthed by the police to explain the sending of the bomb, which was itself completely destroyed.

The explosion also blew down a portion of the house.

Miss Bilodeau, in the course of an interview at the hospital, said the infernal machine was about six inches in length. When Miss Bilodeau began to open the parcel there was a blue flame followed instantly by the explosion.

Mrs. Bilodeau was the wife of Theo. Bilodeau, a contractor.

An inquest will be held this evening by Coroner Bachand, and in the meantime the police are attempting to trace the sender of the infernal machine through the post office

SHEEP RAISING INDUSTRY HELPED BY GOVERNMENT

Minister of Agriculture Succeeds in Bringing About Improvement--Better Conditions for Wool Marketing

(Special to The Times)

Ottawa, June 17.—Particular efforts have been made by Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, since he came into office to encourage the sheep and wool industry in Canada. Sheep raising in many parts of Canada has almost died out and the industry for years has been steadily declining. One of the first moves taken by the Minister was the appointment of two committees of sheep experts, one to study conditions in the Maritime Provinces and the other in the West and in British Columbia. As a result of their recommendations a great stimulus has already been given the industry.

Helping the Industry

The province for the prosecution of an aggressive and systematic campaign for the industry a sheep specialist was appointed, whose duty it has been to give direct assistance to sheep raisers and to devise means for bettering the conditions under which sheep are raised and their products marketed. He has devoted his attention particularly to the West so far and has been able to assist in the organization of two flourishing woolgrowers associations in the West and two wool experts have been sent West to assist in this year's wool clipping.

Marketing the Wool.

Through the efforts of the Minister the gathering of special information relative to the marketing facilities for wool has received attention. Not only have conditions in the home market been carefully studied, but, as well, those in Great Britain. Information from the latter source is exceptionally valuable, particularly as Great Britain represents the central market for the world's wool and on this market virtually all prices are controlled and fixed.

Standardizes Our Wool

An effort is being made by the department of agriculture to bring about such a standardization of Canadian wool and to improve the methods followed in its preparations that it may compete successfully in the world's markets with the wool produced in countries where a more perfect organization prevails. A great stimulus is being given to the industry by the energetic efforts of the government throughout Canada.

LONDON TAKES SECOND GAME FROM THE PETES

A hard fought battle was waged yesterday at Riverside Park before a fairly large crowd of spectators. The Petes, after playing a good game lost to London. Brodie, who handled the pill for the Petes put up a good game, while Trout behind the bat, played for all that was in it. Chaput and Matteson was the workers for London. Chaput was steady throughout the whole game and Matteson was in his usual good form.

The Petes started out in the first inniags by scoring one run, while the visitors were shut out, but in the second, the London boys tallied two and shutting the Petes out. The Petes again scored in the third, making it a tie 2—2. London then closed the gates and that ended the scoring.

Sargeant played a good fast game all through, and got many real hard ones on second base, while Hilliard got everything that came his way.

To-day is ladies' day at the Park, and a large crowd of the fair fans will be present to cheer the boys along.

The Typos baseball club will hold a practice at Riverside Park to-morrow night at 5 o'clock. All members and others interested are requested to be on hand.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 75c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 75c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 381 George St., directly opposite Croxmann's store.

LOYAL FRIEND BOB

MILDRED CAROLINE GOODRIDGE.

A young man, well dressed and clever faced, coming rapidly down the principal street of Fairview, suddenly paused and stared ahead in a startled way. He had apparently observed some one he did not wish to meet, and he turned down a side lane at a brisk excited walk.

"It's the constable, sure enough," he said under his breath, "and I feel pretty sure he must be looking for me." The speaker glanced apprehensively back the way he had come and then broke into a run.

It was a singular position, that in which Cecil Morse found himself. Briefly stated, he was bent upon running away to get married. Others including his legal guardian, Lawyer Grabbe, and his old maid daughter Portia, and their hired emissary, the town constable, were set on nipping the golden progress of love's young dream in the bud.

Cecil was heir to a liberal fortune. He lived with the Grabbe family. The lawyer was intent on keeping a hold on his ward and his fortune as long as he could. Incidentally he plotted to enmesh the young man in the snares of the somewhat faded beauty of the classic Portia.

Now, Cecil had loved and won Claire Wyndham, who lived over in the next county. Her father was a tyrannical old fellow who had heard of the mutual attachment, thundered out that the lovers were too young to think of wedding bells, and had set his foot down—hard.

The result was a plot on the part of the lovers. The Wyndhams were going to take Claire to Europe the following week. In the meantime she had gained permission to visit a schoolgirl chum at Brookville. There Cecil had been the day previous. There, too, all the arrangements had been made for an elopement the next evening. Just now, Cecil had gone to a garage to secure the automobile he had engaged for the trip.

Sent His Machine Through Some Hair-Raising Gyrations.

The auto man was his friend. He told Cecil that the constable had been there looking for him. The lawyer had got wind of Cecil's plan to leave town, and was bound to circumvent it.

"I'm your friend, Cecil," said the garage keeper, "so I warn you. They have the west turnpike guarded. The constable is looking for you with a warrant."

"But I have committed no crime!" exploded the indignant young man.

"No, but the lawyer has secured the warrant on some flimsy charge. The judge is his friend. They will lock you up without bail for a week, and by that time—"

"Claire will be on her way to Europe—never!" declared Cecil to himself, and left the garage—to take flight at his first sight of the constable, who was now in actual pursuit of him.

Cecil was a crack sprinter. His one thought was to get out of town. He would trust to luck for guidance, once clear of his pursuer. Turning into an open stretch he discovered half a mile away a high board fence.

"The very thing!" he cried exultingly, "if my friend Bob Archer, is only on hand."

There had been an aeroplane meet at Fairview for several days. Inside the inclosure was Archer, who was an airship enthusiast. He and Cecil had become great friends. The runner shot a rapid glance behind him. Less than a quarter of a mile away the constable was hot on his trail.

Cecil followed the rounding fence until he came to a narrow open doorway. It was a private entrance to the grounds. The guard sat on a stool midway in the aperture, his back towards him. Cecil could not afford to lose time in an endeavor to persuade this sentinel to allow him ingress. He simply ran up against the man, tipped him flat off the stool, and sped on, followed by the execrations of his astounded victim.

"There is the Flyer," cheered Cecil, promptly making for a hangar beyond which a three-passenger biplane was getting ready for a flight. He recognized the machine belonging to Bob and its owner near by. All out of breath, Cecil ran up to his friend.

"Bob," he planted, "I'm in trouble. Got to get away from Fairview."

"You don't say so!" exclaimed Archer. "Where to, may I ask?"

"Brookville, and quick. The constable is after me. Bob, it's about—what I hinted to you—the girl I love. They are trying to separate us."

"Jump in—the left seat back of the pilot post," directed the young airman. "Strap yourself in. Give her a run, boys," he directed to his assistants.

Chug—chug!—the aerial beauty sped over the grass for thirty feet. Bob shot on the power.

"Hold on, there! Stop that machine! In the name of the law—"

"The mischief!" gasped Cecil.

They were leaving the ground, but not alone. Through his official authority to enter the grounds the constable had fairly overtaken his prey. He had jumped at the machine and skimmed one of the wings. To prevent damage and save him from a fall, Bob was forced to grab the bulky official and drag him into the vacant seat.

"Stop this machine!" flared the constable. "I've got a warrant—"

"Can't stop—got to finish this curve first. Here, Cecil, strap him in, if he doesn't want a tip."

"Ugh! ah!" spluttered the official, turning pale as the biplane shot skywards like an arrow.

"Slip on that helmet," continued Bob, with a wink at Cecil. "Now then, the buffers, and the non-concussion head piece."

"See here—I don't—I won't!" puffed out the constable, as, securely strapped in his seat, the steel and leather head pieces were forced upon him till he was well nigh suffocated and looked like a diver.

"Murder!—let me out!" suddenly yelled the involuntary passenger, but he squirmed in vain. He had forgotten all official dignity by this time. Half frightened to death, as the mischievous Bob sent the Flyer on a circling sweep that fairly took the breath away his uncomfortable victim nearly fainted.

"Oh, let me out—let me out!" pleaded the shivering official.

Bob did not exactly engage in any "shoot-the-chutes" maneuvers, but he did send his machine through some decidedly hair-raising gyrations. Meantime, Cecil enjoyed it all. He trusted to Bob, and this loyal friend and expert aviator certainly took him through.

Once, in the spectacular flight, he leaned towards Cecil and received detailed instructions. There he volplaned, made a circuit, and the Flyer landed in an open field near Brookville, easy and graceful as a bird sinking to its nest.

Cecil quickly removed his safety belt and sprang to the ground.

"Hold on, there!" shouted the constable, "I've got a warrant for that young man."

"No good in this district, officer," smiled Bob. "We've landed just over the county line."

Cecil Morse disappeared. He was to reappear at the Wyndham home two days later. The happy wedded pair had sent a honeymoon wire to Papa Wyndham, pathetically telling him how sorry, but still how happy they were. The reply telegram had conveyed to them the time-honored sentiment: "Come home, and all will be forgiven!"

A DESTRUCTIVE INSECT

One of the most destructive of African insects is the white ant. This strange little creature, well under an inch in length, erects huge heaps in which to dwell. In some places, particularly in the Congo, these heaps convert an otherwise flat country into a hilly one.

They rise from 20 to 50 feet and more in height. Invariably they are crowned with several bamboo trees, which often attain a height of another 30 to 50 feet. Then the heaps are often covered with beautiful ferns and the choicest of wild tropical flowers.

As to the ants themselves they are most destructive, destroying everything except iron and steel. They go about in vast armies, and in a single night the damage they will do is almost incredible. They will enter huts or tents and attack everything that is not made of iron. Curiously enough, they only destroy that portion of the object that is not exposed to the air. For instance, they eat away the soles of boots, leaving the uppers standing in their place. It is only when you come to pick up the object that you find it has been destroyed.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Now it is feared in Europe that the Balkan war is going to end with a beginning.

We cannot help admiring the determination of Uncle Sam to take a few bites out of the plug of the Tabacco Trust.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier says that he is the happiest man in Canada, but how cheap and tawdry is the happiness compared to that of the young man who has just acquired a June bride.

Those persons who, six months ago were cock-sure that Woodrow Wilson, being merely a college professor, would be a sorry failure as a politician, are now beginning to think he must have taken a course in a political correspondence school without anybody knowing it.

The friends of Charles W. Morse, who was released from prison on the ground that he was a "dying man," says that he has already organized several large corporations and is doing well. There are some people, however, who hope that he may do so well as to get back into the penitentiary again.

For the information of members of the Peterborough Police Force, who aspire to high rank, we will say that the town of Turnbull, Iowa, has advertised for a chief of police who can play a trombone or a snare drum.

We agree with the lecturer who said that in delicate and dangerous operations nothing should be permitted to distract the attention of the operating surgeon. If the attention of the latter is not riveted on his work he is apt to sew up a can-opener and a few sponges in an appendicitis patient.

A Toronto woman has entered a suit for damages because she lost her sense of smell in an ambulance accident. If she lived in the vicinity of the lane adjoining the Times building she would regard the deprivation as a blessing. The smells there are so multifarious and unique that it may be doubted if they can be surpassed by the boasted stinks of Constantinople.

THE CHURCH AND THE STATE.

(Christian Guardian.)

The North-West Review, of Winnipeg, would have us believe that an extract which we quoted recently from the Marian expresses the views of Canadian Roman Catholic editors. The Marian said, in part: "If, by an impossible supposition, the Pope should man army and fleet to storm our coast, do you know what Catholics here would do? You would have two million Catholics in the American army ready to resist the Pope's invasion, and you would have seventeen thousand priests in the front ranks of the army fighting till they died for the Constitution of the United States."

The Review declares that this is the attitude of the Canadian Roman Catholics as well. We can only say that we have for years been carefully reading our Canadian Roman Catholic journals, and we have failed to notice anything that would lead us to conclude that they dared to have an opinion contrary to the Bishops. For instance, we have failed to read one solitary remonstrance against the application of the "ne temere" to Canada. We can hardly conceive that intelligent Roman Catholic publicists believe that this makes for Canadian unity and happiness, but we have yet to read the first line of remonstrance in a Roman Catholic paper. It is easy to talk of what we would do under other circumstances, but we fail to recall one instance of a Roman Catholic journal taking the national side in any conflict with the church authorities. If it be argued that Rome never blunders, does not that virtually mean that in any struggle between Church and State, Roman Catholics would be bound to side with the church by conscience? We would be glad to believe otherwise, but the facts seem too plain.

HAS CAPITAL GONE OUT ON A STRIKE?

The world is familiar enough with the strikes of the various groups of industrial workers, from locomotive engineers to barbers. But does the world realize that capital sometimes goes out on a strike, too? It feels itself ill-treated. It becomes grouchy. It makes demands. It withdraws from production industry. It takes itself out of the accustomed channels of useful service.

We are passing through such a period to-day. Capital is going out on a strike. Evidences of this abound. Municipal bonds were once in great demand as gilt-edged securities.

But perhaps there is no capital awaiting employment. Perhaps the Balkan war has consumed it, so that it is a lack of hands rather than disinclination of the hands to work. Some truth in this! There is an undoubted shortage of capital, but strikes in the labor world usually come, too, when there is a relative shortage of labor. The state of mind of capital has much to do with the amount available. It is not now interested in new things.

How shall Capital be got back to work? Doubtless some concessions must be made to it. That which is invested in railroads is now begging the Railway Commission to allow it to charge higher freight rates to offset the increasing labor costs, under recent arbitrations in which the Government had a part. All along the line Capital is dissatisfied with what it is now getting. It refuses to play in the back yard unless it can be treated better. And it has certainly made things very uncomfortable for a few of the countries. And the end is not yet.

A Capital strike may be just about as bad for the country as a labor strike. Both are to be deplored. The old fable of the discontented pendulum is illustrated anew.

Bright, Ruddy Cheeks For Pale Girls

NO LONGER ANY NEED TO BE PALE, WEAK OR ANAEMIC.

By Following the Advice of Miss McEwen You Can Quickly Become Strong Again.

At night she is restless, she dozes, but doesn't sleep soundly.

Vital force must be increased, new blood must be supplied and a general rebuilding take place before she will feel like she ought.

Dr. Hamilton has invaluable experience in these cases and found nothing so prompt in building up young women as his vegetable pills of Mandrake and Butternut.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills begin by cleansing the system and purifying the blood; they also improve digestion and render food ready for absorption. Additional nourishment is quickly supplied and the patient is fast strengthened and invigorated.

"In using Dr. Hamilton's Pills I find my system is wonderfully built up. It is certainly the most effective remedy I ever used. I have now a good appetite, sleep more soundly, and awaken in the morning feeling quite refreshed.

"Formerly I felt tired and depressed. I looked as if a severe illness were hanging over my head.

"Nothing could give quicker results than Dr. Hamilton's Pills and I strongly advise every young woman to use them."

All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box or five boxes for $1.00, by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

THE BLACK SHEEP.

In a quiet village, not so many miles away,
Dwelt a rich and aged man, his hairs were few and gray;
He had three sons, his only ones, both Jack and Tom were sly;
While Ted was honest as could be, and would not tell a lie;
They planned their best to ruin Ted in the old man's eyes—
Their poison soon began its work till Ted was much despised.
One night the old man said: "Begone! you're heartless to the core"
These were the words the lad said as he stood beside the door:

Chorus—
Don't be angry with me, dad,
Don't turn me from your door;
I know that I've been wayward,
But I won't be any more:
Give me but another chance,
Just put me to the test—
And you'll find the black sheep loves you dad
Far better than the rest.

Year by year sped quickly and the father, now grown old,
Called both Jack and Tom to him and gave them all his gold;
I only need this little room, a place by your fireside.
One night as Jack returning home he brought with him a bride.
The wife began to hate the father more and more each day;
One night he heard the three declare: "The old fool's in the way!"
They planned next day to take him to a poorhouse that was near.
When like a flash the black sheep's words came ringing in his ear.

(Chorus).

A wagon drove up to the door. It is the poorhouse van,
The brothers point toward their dad, and say there is your man.
Just then a manly form appears a pushes through the crowd,
Here! stop! You brutes, the strang said. This will not be allowed.
You took this old man's property and all that he could save,
You even sold the little plot containing his wife's grave;
For I'm his son, but not your kin from now till Judgment Day.
The father clasped the bloack sheep's hand. The crowd then hear him say:

Chorus—
Don't be angry with me, lad,
I turned you from my door;
I know that I was foolish,
I've repented o'er and o'er;
I wish I gave to you my gold,
For you have stood the test;
And I find the black sheep loves his dad,
Far better than the rest.

DIVORCE REVEALS STORY OF ELOPEMENT

New York, June 17. — Papers just signed by Supreme Court Justice Gedgerich granting a divorce to Alfred H. Taylor from Mrs. Fannie A. Taylor, disclose the breaking up of two families through the elopement of a church organist with a member of an Albany church three years ago.

Neither Mrs. Taylor nor Peter Miller, an Albany merchant, with whom she ran away, have been heard of by their families since, but a letter from Mrs. Taylor to Miller, which is one of the chief exhibits in the case, indicated that they would go to San Francisco and later to Ireland.

The papers show that at the time Mrs. Taylor eloped with Miller she was living with her husband at 5 Morningside avenue, and told him she was going to Albany for a visit.

On the same day, April 12, 1910, Miller left his home at 73 Dana place Albany, with his grip. His wife, Mrs. Annie Spencer Miller, suspected that he might not return and her daughter tried to drag her father by pulling his coat. Mrs. Miller then told her daughter, "Sis, if he wants to go, let him go."

Mrs. Miller, who was one of the chief witnesses for Taylor, said that she and her husband has been members of the Ash Grove Methodist Episcopal Church in Albany for years and during that time Mrs. Taylor was the organist. Mrs. Miller's daughter Annie sang in the choir. For two years before Miller eloped with Mrs. Taylor he had been showing her attentions and had taken her to his home to call many times. Taylor, who had been in Miller's employ, finally came to New York and Miller's friendship for Mrs. Taylor was causing talk in the church when Mrs. Taylor left Albany to join her husband.

MEAT ON THE FARM

More Important That Animals Be Healthy Than Extremely Fat

There are a few essential points that should be observed in selecting animals to butcher on the farm. The first consideration should be given to the matter of health in the animal to be used for food. No matter how fat an animal may be nor how perfect its form, if it is not in perfect health the best quality of meat cannot be obtained. If the animal is suffering from fever or from any serious derangement of the system the flesh will not be wholesome food. Flesh from animals that have been ill before slaughter is not likely to cure well and is very difficult to keep after curing. Bruises, broken limbs or like accidents all have the same effect on meat as illness, and unless the animal can be dressed immediately after such accidents, it is best not to use the meat for food. This would be true especially if there has been a rise in temperature of two or more degrees. Such a rise in temperature just previous to slaughter is likely to result in stringy, gluey meat, and create a tendency to sour in curing. Animals that are in poor flesh will not yield first-class meat. While the texture may not be bad in such meat it is essential that a reasonable amount of fat be present to give juiciness and flavor to the flesh. The presence of large amounts of fat is not essential and, in fact, it is often wasteful. It is far more important that the animal be in good health than that it be extremely fat.—Andrew Boss.

Broke up Forty Homes

In a case in which Elizabeth Whelan got two months at Athy Petty Sessions for exposing a child, the husband said he had had forty homes both in Scotland and Athy, but through the wife drinking every one of them had been broken up. The beds had been stripped and the children's clothes sold by her for drink.

Patience and Virtue

Somebody suggests that patience is more frequently a necessity than a virtue.

Repenting at Leisure

INDIANS HAD WIRELESS

System of Crude Instruments Worked by Amazon Natives

The Catuquinaru Indians, in the valley of the Amazon, have long had a wireless telegraphic system which enables them to communicate with each other. The machine consists of a hollow piece of hard palmwood filled with sand, rubber, pieces of wood and hide, and fixed in a socket of sand, hide, resin and rubber. This is struck with a club of wood coated with rubber and hide.

One of these instruments is usually hidden in each habitation or malocca, and the maloccas are about a mile distant one from the other, and all on a direct line north and south. The instruments are in tune with each other, and, when struck with a club the neighboring ones to the north and south, if not above a mile distant, respond to or echo the blow. To this an Indian answers by striking the instrument in the malocca with which it is desired to communicate, which blow in turn is echoed by the instrument originally struck. Each malocca has its own series of signals.

STREET NOISES IN PEKIN

Street Vendors Raise Bedlam of Sound

An analysis of the street noises of Pekin has been made by the correspondent of an American newspaper and ought to be useful when the anti-noise crusade reaches the Orient.

The great cause of confusion he finds is the various street vendors, each of whom is armed with a noise-producing instrument by which he advertises his trade. The barber has two prongs of steel through which he draws a spike and thus makes a loud whir. The seller of sweetmeats holds in his right hand two brass cups which he jangles together. The buyer of old clothes taps a small drum with a bit of bamboo, getting by this combination a plunk, plunk, that attracts trade. The man who has wicker baskets to sell beat half a gourd with a drumstick, the clothes seller swings a drum which has two bits of metal attached to it by strings, the toy dealer strikes a brass gong of a peculiarly penetrating tone, the knife grinder claps three blocks of iron together and the seller of charcoal announces his coming by a repeated tap, tap on a block of wood.

The watchman introduces a little variety. He is armed with a wooden drum, which he taps in different measure to mark the different hours of the night.—New York Post.

Will Tattooed on Man's Arm

The will found in a scrap-book which came prominently before the Dumfries Sheriff's Court, is one of many that have been discovered in unlooked-for places. Even Mr. Rider Haggard's story of the will tattooed on a woman's back is nearly equalled by the case in which a dead man's arm, carefully preserved, was produced in the probate court. On the flesh appeared the last wishes of the testator concerning his estate. A lawyer, who is chiefly concerned with will cases, gave a representative various instances of strange places where wills were found.

Buy Tickets for Sun Baths

The sun bath is said to be so popular at present in Germany that in several cities one can buy a ticket for a sun bath just as in Canada one buys a ticket for a bath in the surf. The sun bath ticket entitles the holder to a room for disrobing, a bathing suit and a "place in the sun."

BARNUM & BAILY A GREAT AGGREGATION

In some respects a circus bears resemblance to an opera troupe. At least no operative impressario takes better care of his stars than do the managers of the Barnum & Bailey circus. When the Barnum show comes to town, Monday, June 23rd, the family of giraffes, including a 20 months old infant, together with Chimmie Fadden a remarkable baboon, will be found in charge of a valet, whose sole interest lies in the welfare of his wards. Andrew Zingara, valet, practically lives with the strange animals, who are as exacting in their demands as the most tempermental prima donna. It is Andrew that sees to it that Chimmie's tobacco is properly kept, and that the oats are poured down the baby giraffe's long neck lengthwise and not crosswise. Zingara is proud of his task and will allow no one else to handle his charges. No English valet could be more careful about the temperature of his master's bath than is Zingara regarding the diet of his wards. The Barnum and Bailey circus folk are proud of their managerie and the claim is made that it is the largest and most diversified zoo ever taken upon tour. Most of the types slain by Roosevelt in Africa are to be seen, including the zebra, eland, wildebeest, hartebeest, ibex, oryx, Thompson's gazelle and many varieties of African antelope and deer. Then there may be seen a fine specimen of the bi-horned rhinoceros, together with Babe, the huge hippipitamus, who most generally wears a bland smile. Babe represents an investment of $7,000 and is one of the aristocrats of the circus zoo. Bwano Tumbo shot them in the most nonchalant manner while campaigning in Africa, and Richard Harding Davis, having once seen one afloat in the Congo, wrote a whole book about it to the very great delight of every young woman's seminary in the land. But the circus man admits that the circus hasn't got a gorilla. A gorilla is practically priceless, because he can't be induced to live outside of Africa, even when you catch him, which is mighty seldom. Teddy didn't even see one. The gorilla's standard occupation is, or was, chasing Dr. Livingston, and attacking Paul Du Chaillu with a club. The circus is sorry for its deficiency in this respect, and partially atones for it by presenting an animal exhibit larger and more varied than ever before. But the downright intelligence it is claimed that the baseball elephants with this year's Barnum show lead the way. The huge brutes play the national game and one of the creatures makes a homerun by a lumbering slide into the homeplate. The circus promises many novelties and is said more than ever before to justify its trademarked title of the "greatest show on earth." The circus is making its farewell appearance in Canada prior to a winter season in London, England.

BASEBALL.

Philadelphia, June 17.—It was announced that Jack Coombs, Connie Mack's star pitcher, will leave the Athletics temporarily and go to his home in Maine, for a long rest. Coombs has been in poor health this spring and has been used but little in the games already played. He will probably return in August.

THE OAR.

Cambridge, Mass., June 17.—When the Harvard 'varsity meets Yale in the annual boat race at New London, June 20, the oarsmen in the Crimson 'varsity shell will represent $45,000,000 of heir apparents. They will compete against the charges of the Yale, who have been coached by Averill Harriman, the inheritor of $70,000,000. The Harvard crew men are nearly all sons of millionaires. In the list are representatives of the Morgan, Myer, Murray and Chanler families of New York; the Trumbull and Harwood families of Boston, and the Mills family of Portland, Ore. The fortunes of eight of the oarsmen range from $1,000,000 to $25,000,000, E. D. Morgan of Westbury, L. I., leading.

RING.

(By Robert Fitzsimmons).

Men are just the same today that they were ten or fifteen years ago. The reason why we don't have boxers of the same class is that the sport has changed.

It used to be all twenty or forty-five rounds or to a finish. Men fighting to a finish have to know how to fight. You don't have to know so much about it boxing ten rounds without a decision.

Look over that fight of mine against Corbett at Carson City in 1897. If that had been a ten-round fight, no decision, I'd have been forced to rush in and take a chance of winning with a punch. I wouldn't have had to show any skill. As it was, I calculated just how long Corbett could stand a certain pace, and then I set the pace and wore him down until I got him. The result was as sure as science could make it. I knew how I could fight and how he could fight, and just what advantage in skill and strength I had, and used it. I never figured for a moment that he had any chance to beat me. But I didn't go in blind, slamming around for general results. Corbett had his calculation. He thought he could wear me down with jabs, bleed me and weaken me, and then get me. His calculation was wrong and mine was right, as the result proved.

That fight only took fourteen rounds, but if it had gone forty I'd have followed the line I set out on, gradually wearing him down and then planting the solar plexus punch when I had forced or tricked him into giving me a sure opening.

Now suppose, that had been a six or a ten round bout. Corbett would have had just one idea in his mind—to stand off and jab me and make a showing and stick the ten without letting me slip one over. I'd have been working to get him in a hurry, and where would the science have been?

This no decision thing allows boxers to stall. In my championship days I never thought of such a thing as stalling, except just once. That time I stalled because I had sent my wife a wire that I was going to win in the ninth round, and the other fellow was easier than I expected, so I had to stall through a couple of rounds to keep from knocking him out too soon.

When you have a decision to win at the end of a fight there isn't the same temptation to stall. The way it is two-thirds of the boxers are satisfied to slide through ten rounds, and get the money without extending themselves or taking a chance. If the route was twenty rounds, they couldn't afford to do that because the chance of losing would be greater. If they were forced to fight every time they got into a ring they'd develop great fighters just the way they used to.

Edgreen, the celebrated authority on sport, says: Jim Flynn would like to fight Gunboat Smith. This is a brand of willingness that isn't overly popular among the heavies just now. One hardly knows whether to congratulate Flynn upon his courage or suggest that he have his cranium prospected for cracks.

Smith, so says rumor, has been overcome of late with that popular malady that is attacking all successful "hopes." He has delusions that his slightest effort in the glove-swinging line is worth thousands and thousands of dollars. It's even said that nothing less than a $7000 "end" will suit him in any engagement, even with little Flynn. Smith's manager is throwing out the grappling iron and claiming that he is booked to the "white heavyweight championship," or some such thing, now that McCarty is no longer wearing the belt presented by McCarey in Los Angeles.

This is open to argument. If McCarty was a champion, then Pelkey holds the title at present, even though an unfortunate accident was the cause of McCarty's failure to complete the ten rounds at Calgary. Pelky may not be much of an obstacle, but he's there.

Arguing on the other hand, McCarty had no better claim to any kind of a "championship" than had Smith. He beat Palzer, who had beaten Wells. But he hadn't beaten Smith, who also knocked out Wells while Wells was champion of England. Also Gunboat beat Willard, winning a twenty-round decision over him in San Francisco, that Willard had the best of McCarty here.

The only way to settle the matter it seems, is to toss them all into a barn lock the door, wait until the loud calls for help have subsided, and then bring the survivor out and drape the laurel wreath artistically across his manly brow.

HOME HEALH CLUB

Written by
DR. DAVID H. REEDER,

SMOTHERED — (Part 2) — You might think it's a far cry from the smothering of a baby to a farmer's dairy barn, but it isn't. Not long ago the proud owner of a big stock and grain farm invited me to go and see his estate and I went. We tramped over the broad fields and through the woods by a beautiful little lake. From one point we could see for many miles in all directions and as we breathed in great draughts of the fresh spring air. Then we went to the great barns and we found the tools, the hay and the grain all cared for, but down underneath, knee deep in a foul smelling, filthy mud and so dark that the color could not be well distinguished we found the milk cows and the brood sows. Several months before the farmer had lost within a week over $1500.00 worth of hogs and he could not understand why as the disease had never been in that part of the country before. The cows were of a sickly looking lot, although he assured me they were of the finest registered breeds and he could not understand why they were so poor. He then blamed it all on the hired help as he visited the place only once a wee and he supposed the feed must have been stolen and sold.

I made no comments. I knew it would be useless. Others had told him the cause of the trouble but he knew better. The cows and the brood sows must be kept warm but I knew that they were simply smothered.

CLUB NOTES

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5039 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago. Send full name and address with 4 cents postage.

Dear Doctor:—What is the best treatment for Whooping Cough in a child of 10 years of age. It is present in my neighborhood and the doctors say that nothing can be done to help the patients. Mrs. R.F.W.

See that the child is given a light, easily digested diet and exercise great care against the contracting of colds by avoiding wet feet and all dampness as far as possible constipation also should be guarded against. It is almost useless to spend money for drugs or doctors. By following the above suggestions you will guard against bad effects and that is all that can be done. At this time of the year in all probability, recovery will be comparatively rapid. A flannel band worn around the abdomen, applied quite tightly is an excellent support to the muscles and lessens the strain of the coughing.

Dear Doctor:—I will be very thankful to you if you will tell me what to do for bad breath. I have tried charcoal tablets, but they did not do any good. I think it comes from stomach, but am in good health.

N. W.

Bad breath may depend upon several different conditions, such as chronic catarrh, enlarged tonsils, allowing accumulation of food material which decomposes, defective teeth, indigestion, constipation, worms and certain chronic forms of Bronchitis. Have the nose and throat examined to see whether any local conditio is present which requires attention and have your teeth fixed if needed. A spray of Hydrogen Peroxide or Liquor Antisepticus Alkalinus, either being diluted with equal parts of warm water, may be used in the nose and throat, three times daily. Constipation, indigestion and worms should be treated according to the principles which have so often been stated in these columns and which are fully explained in the Club Books. In brief use for constipation a laxative diet which bran bread, green vegetables, fruits and buttermilk form a large part. Remove the cause and the bad breath will disappear of itself.

Dear Doctor:—What would you advise me to do to get rid of deep rings under the eyes? I am a young girl and have had them ever since I can remember. I would like to get rid of them as soon as possible. For any advise I will be thankful.

A. M.

The condition described in your letter simply indicates that the circulation is not maintained as efficiently as it should be. This is probably due to failure to observe some of the fundamental laws of health, such as the use of a diet which will prevent constipation arising, with its attending self-poisoning, failure to take sufficient outdoor exercise, etc. In order to overcome the first tendency ad ont a diet composed largely of laxative foods, although if the weight is not up to par, milk and eggs should be used freely in addition. Exercise in the open air as much of the time as possible and sleep in a thoroughly ventilated room. Take a cold bath each morning, followed by a brisk rub dry. This is an excellent tonic to the circulatory organs. Proper massage is also helpful.

STRIKE OF WOMEN WOULD GET VOTE

So Thinks Prominent Englishwoman Who No Longer Favors Militant Methods

"I'll tell you why I am not a militant suffragist any longer," said [illegible], a former hearty supporter of "the cause" in England, to an interviewer. "I believe in militancy of a kind, and I feel the need for general militancy passed when the man in the street realized what the [illegible] militancy now should concentrate itself on the Government only. It is a great mistake to attack the public by destroying letters and property. John Bull is obstinate. Look at the pictured representation of him and see if you think he is likely to be bullied into giving anything he doesn't want to give. No, I think the general policy should be subtler and the Government should be harassed continually, special attention also being given to each 'anti' member of the House of Commons.

"On the other hand, though, the militants do get a certain reward for their efforts. They get plenty of advertisement. Why, a few years ago when we were holding meetings and making earnest appeals we were practically boycotted by the Press. Now every sensational manoeuvre gets plenty of space.

"One of the great difficulties with militancy is that it is so hard to organize and manage. That is another reason why I resigned from active work. I was on the committee of my association, but when militant acts were performed by our members, I usually heard of them through the papers. Yet we had passed a resolution that all militancy should be planned, or at least approved, by the committee. I finally came to the conclusion that I could do just as much by writing and proselytizing as I was accomplishing there. I consider one of the greatest mistakes the Government made was in stopping the public meetings, but they are always taking steps in the wrong direction, it seems to me. If a thing is seething and burning it is better to give it an outlet. Then the forcible feeding. How absolutely unnecessary. Let the women starve themselves ten days and then come out. Anyone can starve ten days without any lasting ill effects. I've tried going without any food three days myself, and felt the better for it, but they forcibly feed the suffragists almost at once.

"What do I think will be the outcome of it all? Who can say? I'm prepared for strange developments. What I would like to see, though, would be a well-organized, well-managed woman's strike. Every woman in revolt!"

Grass for a Queen

An amusing story is told of the ten-year-old son and heir of Lord Lurgan. As a small child he was extremely devoted to soldiers. Once at a garden party at Buckingham palace he spent his time picking daisies and giving them to the bandsmen. The Royal hostess, Queen Alexandra, asked if he had a daisy for her. But her majesty not being a soldier, the child replied: "No; grass for you," and thrust in her white-gloved hand a small bunch of grass, to her Majesty's intense amusement.

Linoleum Substitute

Any old carpet may be used as a substitute for linoleum. First mend the rents or very thin spots, then tack carefully to the floor. Make a cooked starch of wheat flour and apply with a brush or broom. Let dry, then apply two coats of paint. If painted once or twice a year it will last indefinitely.

BOUDOIR SECRETS

Hints For Gifts and Dressing Table Accessories

A vanity case is always welcome. No matter how strongminded a woman may think herself she is generally willing to admit that she delights in catching an occasional glimpse of her face in a mirror. There are fascinating new gold-filled vanity cases now. On the outside is a tiny watch not more than half an inch in diameter, but large enough to remind the owner to keep her appointments. When the case is opened a small compartment, with mirror top, is revealed, and this conceals the little powder puff. Below is another compartment lined with lavender moire, which contains the invisible hairpins and the dress pins.

If your best friend is going on a voyage or a long journey and you want to give her a farewell present that is useful and pretty you cannot do better than bestow upon her one of the new sets of "utility bags." They are fashioned in rubberised satin of various colors, and are corded together. They hold the little necessaries and tuck into corners of the dressing case.

Pasteboard boxes covered with pretty chintz-pattern papers are attractive and hold all sorts of small dress accessories. They can be labelled veils, gloves, neckties, stockings, etc., and kept on shelves in the cupboard.

Ammonia is an invaluable toilet requisite. The brushes and combs cannot be properly cleansed without it. If you wash out your own fine handkerchiefs put a few drops of the ammonia in the water and see how much whiter you can get them.

POOR OF DUBLIN LOVE LADY ABERDEEN

Wife of Former Governor-General of Canada Helps to Make Many Lives Bright

Of the two Ladies Aberdeen, the one of fact and the other of fiction, the former is infinitely the more attractive. It is impossible to encounter the lady of the anecdotes, either in print or in spoken gossip, without conjuring up a mental portrait of the lady of reality. Try to fit her into the distorted picture that is so often thrust before one: it is impossible to reconcile the two.

In the first place, Lady Aberdeen's eyes give the lie (ever so gently!) to the notion that her charities are unwise, that she misunderstands the poor, that she offends the Dublin sense of humor. The only thing she might honestly be accused of offending is Dublin's lack of humor—the lack of humor of the Dublin of officialdom; the only people whom she might with any sort of justice be thought to misunderstand are not the poor, but the rich. In any case, there must surely be a better word than "misunderstanding" for her attitude towards the small group of people who are discontented with the present regime in Dublin. She understands the "smart," the unpleasantly "smart," view of life well enough to be in complete disagreement with it.

The "Extraordinary Smile"

It may be objected that this is rather much to read in any eyes. But Lady Aberdeen's are remarkable. They have "sweetness and light"; they are wise and kind, humorous and penetrating; they are as famous as her smile. "An ordinary woman with an extraordinary smile" was the initial impression of a man who makes history in the United States when he first saw her across the Canadian border. He had gone to Ottawa to observe the formalities of a Governor-General's court, prepared to be amused by its stiffness; but the thing that impressed him most was the angelic good humor of Lady Aberdeen. An English Lord Chief Justice, on the other hand who went expecting to see a much freer and easier state of things than he allowed in his own particular court, found himself reminded ten minutes after his arrival of some minor law of precedence he had neglected to observe. "We're kept in our places here,' he growled, and behaved himself for the rest of his visit.

Formality, however, is not the chief characteristic of her court. One of the very few stories, out of a multitude, bearing a real resemblance to her or her ways, purports to come from a Liberal Minister. It is a caricature, but, at any rate, not a libel. The First Lord called at the Castle and rang the bell, but without effect. After ringing again, he peered through the glass panels, at the side of the door, into a deserted interior. Just as he turned to go, he saw Lady Aberdeen, her skirts well tucked up, rush across the hall, as if from one place of concealment to another. A moment after a servant also ran across the Minister's field of vision in the same direction, and faster. The visitor turned to go but just then the door was opened and he was admitted. "I do hope you were not kept waiting," said Lady Aberdeen after greeting him. "You see, this is the Servants' Weekly Games Day, and the household is so excited; everything is at sixes and sevens!"

Her Greatest Friends

One thing quite certain in Dublin is that the poor are fond of her. Even after she has written three volumes on their diseases, and plied them with medicine, they still regard her as their friend. Her own great griefs in life are akin to theirs; the loss of a son, the spoiling of maternal hopes, these are woes common to the Castle and the back street. She says that she has not only given consolation in the slums, but found it there. As for her work on Ireland's crusade against tuberculosis, she knows quite well that a certain section of society would prefer to have less said of the prevalence of the scourge. There is the season to keep in mind, and the prosperity of the city, which might suffer if the notion got abroad that it was a centre of disease. But Lady Aberdeen does not hush up because she is told to. She attacks in Dublin the problems she would attack in London, or any other city where the need and her duty seemed clear to her.

A president of the International Council of Women, of the Irish Industries Association, and of three or four other similar bodies, and a founder of the Victorian Order of Nurses in Canada, she also started and christened the Onward and Upward Association. And if she is complimented on her charities, she explains that they are all part of a mission to herself—"she has her soul to keep."—London Sketch.

RULES FOR HOUSEWIVES

Management and Forethought Necessary to Economize Time

After closely studying myself and others at work, and noticing the motions we all perform in the household tasks, says a writer on the subject, I grouped the causes which make for the larger part of the inefficiency of housewives as follows:

1. The worker does not have all the needful tools or utensils at hand before her when she begins to work. Therefore—

2. She wastes time and effort walking to, hunting for, or fetching ingredients, tools, or materials she neglected to have at hand when she began the task.

3. She stops in the middle of one task to do something else quite unrelated.

4. She lowers the efficiency of good work by losing time putting tools or work away, generally due to poor arrangement of kitchen, pantry, and closets.

5. She uses a poor tool, or a wrong one; or works at a table, sink, ironing-board, or molding-board of the wrong height from the floor.

6. She loses time because she does not keep sufficient supplies on hand, and because she does not keep her tools and utensils in good condition.

Just see, for instance, how much time a woman wastes by using the wrong tools.

The right tool, the tool that will do the work in the shortest time, is almost as important as are methods that will save time and labor. I say almost as important, because the right methods and working without waste motion are the more essential part of any efficiency progress. No matter how useful a labor-saving device may be, if a woman doesn't plan her work, doesn't know how to work so that she can use the right tool the right way, so that she can get the most out of the tool, the value of the device is lessened.

Too many women put too much emphasis on the tool and too little emphasis on themselves. If the woman is inefficient how can she use a tool except in an inefficient way? I believe that woman's liberation from drudgery in housework lies not so much in tools and devices as in her own improved advancement in methods of work.

But even if a woman has the finest tools or newest devices to help her she must plan for and arrange her tasks in a very definite manner. She cannot get the greatest worth from the most perfect tool unless she has planned the right time to use it in relation to other tasks.

SPLENDID QUEBEC PO

Bishop of Ungava Enthusiastic Ab t Sept Iles Harbor Open all Year

That with the annexation of Ungava, the Province of Quebec has obtained a splendid winter port which is destined to become one of the most important on the Atlantic coast was the statement made by Mgr. Blanche, Bishop of Ungava, speaking at Quebec.

Speaking of the port of Sept Iles, Mgr. Blanche said: "There is that seaport open all the year round, and big enough to contain the whole British fleet. It is closer to Europe than any other of the Atlantic seaports, and is a splendid refuge, being protected by the mountains from severe storms."

With reference to the industrial development of Labrador, His Lordship declared that this had been advancing in an astonishing manner, considering the difficulty of communication with the interior.

"This development," he said, "has particularly shown itself in the establishment of several large pulp manufacturing mills. "Mr. Menier, who is associated with his brother, is exporting a considerable amount of pulp from the Island of Anticosti, thanks to the modern equipment of his mills. Twelve hundred workmen are employed constantly there. At Clark City, 18 miles from Sept Iles, there is also a mill which gives work to 600 employes.

"But the exploitation of pulp is not the principal resource of the country. The fisheries are also very productive. The salmon fishing on the River Moisie is a case in point. This watercourse alone produces during the season 75,000 pounds of salmon. This fish would give enormous profits to the fishermen if there were rapid trains to deliver them fresh to the markets of New York and Boston. As it is, they barely sell for seven cents a pound."

Mgr. Blanche is a man born to lead. His white hair and bronzed, rugged face, show the individual who has braved great hardships, and is capable of braving them again.

He was once an officer of the Mobiles in the Franco-German War, and bears on the side of his head a scar from a wound received when he was made prisoner. It was not until several years after the war that he entered a religious community, and was shortly after driven from France by the Law of Congregations.

WEAPONS OF MURDER

Peculiar Instruments Chosen by Criminals for Theri Deeds of Violence

The ordinary Paris apache or hooligan invariably carries a revolver, and most of the murders which have recently horrified Paris have been committed with the ordinary six-shooter.

The weapon which the police found upon Prevost, who lay in wait for a bank messenger was a novelty. He and a friend named Coulon planned to kill the messenger in a way which would be least likely to attract public attention.

Coulon carried a bludgeon with which to stun the man. Prevost had a medical syringe charged with that most deadly of all poisons, prussic acid. He confessed that he had meant to squirt this down the victim's throat, which would have resulted in his instant death.

A pistol which renders the person fired at unconscious without seriously injuring him was found upon a hooligan arrested in East London. The cartridges contained a mixture of gunpowder, burned cayenne pepper, and lycopodium, the fumes of which caused the person fired at to lose consciousness.

Very little originality is shown by the assassin. If he does not use a pistol or a bomb he has recourse to an ordinary knife. In almost all political assassinations one of these three has been used.

The only exception was Lucchent, the anarchist who so brutally killed the unfortunate Empress of Austria at Geneva. His weapon was a file fixed in a wooden handle and ground to a keen point. This was afterwards destroyed by the Swiss authorities.

The "black-jack," a variation of the old-fashioned sand bag, is a favorite with the New York crook. "Silent talkers" is another name given to these deadly weapons, one blow from which will stun the strongest man.

As diabolical a specimen of murderous ingenuity as ever was discovered by police was found in the possession of a Chinamen, who had been working in a laundry in New Orleans, and who was believed to have intended using it upon his employer.

It was a tiny stilletto with a handle about as thick as a carpenter's pencil, and a blade four inches long of glass pointed as keenly as a needle. A tiny groove had been made around the blade close to the hilt. Suppose it was driven into a man's body it would be certain to break off at the grove and leave three inches of glass deep in his flesh. What is more, the puncture would be so tiny that it would probably close at once, and show no mark, not even a single drop of blood.

A blind elderly woman who was found dead on the kitchen floor of her house in Manchester, Eng., had been stabbed with a corn knife, which was found on the floor beside her. The murderer was never caught. And a surgeon's lancet was the weapon used by the maniac who, the year 1900, stabbed no fewer than eighty people in the streets at Kiel, and before he was at last arrested caused a panic worse than that produced by the infamous Jack the Ripper.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith detains while the prisoner is sent for. An order comes from General Varney for Wilfred to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

Edith motioned Mr. Arrelsford away. He went with ill-concealed impatience to the far side of the room and waited nervously to give the signal, anxious lest something should miscarry because of this unfortunate unwillingness of the girl to play her part.

"What is it, dear?" whispered her mother.

"Mamma," said Edith, she forced the words out, "he—he—loves me."

"Impossible!" returned Mrs. Varney, controlling her voice so that the other occupant of the room could not hear.

"Yes," faltered the girl, "and I—some one else must do it."

"You don't mean," said Mrs. Varney, "that you return—"

But Mr. Arrelsford's patience had been strained to the breaking point. He did not know what interchange was going on between the two women, but it must be stopped. He came forward resolutely. The girl saw his determination in his face.

"No, no," she whispered, "not that, not now!"

She shrank away from him as she spoke.

"But, Edith," said Mrs. Varney, "more reason now than ever."

"I don't know what you are talking about," said Mr. Arrelsford, "but we must go on."

"But why—why are you doing this?" asked Edith, pleading desperately.

"Because I please," snapped out the secret service agent, and it was quite evident that he was pleased. Some of his satisfaction was due to the fact that he had by his own efforts at last succeeded in unearthing a desperate plot, and had his hands on the plotters. That he was thereby serving his country and demonstrating his fitness for his position of responsibility and trust also added to his satisfaction, but this was greatly enhanced by the fact that Thorne was his rival, and he could make a guess that he was a successful rival in love as well as in war.

"You have never pleased before," persisted Edith. "Hundreds of suspicious cases have come up—hundreds of men have been run down—but you preferred to sit at your desk in the war department, until—"

"Edith! Edith!" interposed her mother.

"I can't discuss that now," said Arrelsford.

"No, we will not discuss it. I will have nothing more to do with the affair."

"You won't," whispered Arrelsford threateningly.

"Don't say that," urged Mrs. Varney.

"Nothing, nothing, at all," said Edith.

"At your own suggestion, Miss Varney," persisted the secret service agent vehemently, "I agreed to accept a plan by which we could criminate this friend of yours or establish his innocence. When everything is ready you propose to withdraw and make the experiment a failure, perhaps allowing him to escape altogether and being a party to treason against your own country."

Edith looked from Arrelsford's set face, with his bitter words, the truth of which she was too just not to acknowledge, ringing in her ears, to the face of her mother. It was a sweet face, full of sympathy and love, but it was set in the same way as the man's. The patriotism of the woman was aroused. The kind of help that Edith wanted in her mother's look she did not find there.

"You mustn't do this, Edith; you must do your part," said Mrs. Varney.

The resolution of the girl gave way.

"He is there," she faltered piteously, "he is there at the further end of the veranda. What more do you want of me?" Her voice rose in spite of her efforts to control herself.

"Call him to the room, and do it naturally. If anyone else should do it he would suspect something immediately and be on his guard."

"Very well," said the girl helplessly. "I will call him."

She turned toward the window.

"Wait," said Arrelsford, "one thing more. I want him to have this paper." He handed Edith the communication which had been taken from Jonas earlier in the evening.

"What am I to do with this?" asked the girl, taking it.

"Give it to him, and tell him where it came from. Tell him old Jonas got it from a prisoner at Libby prison and brought it to you."

"But why am I to do this?" asked the girl.

"Why not? If he is innocent, what's the harm? If not, if he is in the plot and we can't catch him otherwise, the message on the paper will send him to the telegraph office tonight, and that's where we want him."

"But I never promised that," said the girl with obvious reluctance to do anything not only that might tend to harm the suspected, but that might work to the furtherance of Arrelsford's designs.

"Do you still believe him innocent?" sneered the man.

Edith lifted her head and for the first time she looked Arrelsford full in the face.

"I still believe him innocent," answered the girl slowly and with deliberate emphasis.

"Then why are you afraid to give him the paper?" asked Arrelsford, directly with cunning adroitness.

The girl, thus entrapped, clasped the paper to her breast, and turned toward the window. Her mind was made up, but it was not necessary for her to call. Her ear, tuned to every sound he made, caught the noise of his footfall on the porch. She turned her head and spoke to the other two.

"Captain Thorne is coming," she whispered expressionlessly, "unless you want to be seen, you had better go."

"Here, this way, Mrs. Varney," said Arrelsford, taking that lady by the arm and going down to the far end to the door covered by the portieres.

The two disappeared, and it was impossible for a soul to see them in the darkness of the hall, although they could see clearly enough, even in the dimly lighted drawing room, everything that would happen. Edith stood as if rooted to the floor, the paper still in her hand, when Thorne opened the sash which she had closed behind her and entered in his turn the window through which she had come a short time before. He stepped eagerly toward her.

"You were so long," he whispered, "coming for me, that—" He stopped abruptly and looked at her face, "is anything the matter?"

"No."

"You had been away such a long time that I thought—"

"Only a few minutes."

"Only a few years," said the man passionately. His voice was low and gently modulated, not because he had anything to conceal but because of the softness of the moonlight and the few candles dimly flickering upon the walls of the great room, the look in the girl's eyes, and the feeling in his heart. A few minutes, the girl had said—Ah, it was indeed a few years to him.

"If it was a few years to you," returned the girl with a violent effort at lightness, although her heart was torn to pieces with the emotions of the moment, "what a lot of time there is."

"No," said Thorne, "there is only tonight."

Edith threw out her hand to check what she would fain have heard, but Thorne caught it. He came closer to her.

"There's only tonight, and you in the world," he said.

"You overwhelm me."

"I can't help myself. I came here determined not to tell you how I loved you, and for the last half hour I have been telling you nothing else. I could tell you all my life and never finish. Ah, my darling, my darling—there's only tonight and you."

Edith swayed toward him for a moment, completely influenced by his ardor, but then drew back.

"No, no," she faltered. "You mustn't." She glanced around the room apprehensively. "No, no, not now!"

"You are right," said the man. She dragged herself away from him. He would not retain her against her will, and without a struggle he released her hand. "You are right. Don't mind what I said, Miss Varney. I have forgotten myself, believe me." He drew further away from her. "I came to make a brief call, to say good-bye and—"

He turned and walked toward the hall door, after making her a low bow, and it was not without a feeling of joy that she noticed that he walked unsteadily, blindly.

"Oh, Captain Thorne," she said, just as he reached the door, "I—"

He stopped and looked back.

"Before you go I want to ask your advice about something."

"My advice?"

"Yes, it seems to be a military matter, and—"

"What is it?" asked Thorne, turning back.

"What do you think this means?" said the girl, handing him the folded dispatch.

She had intended to look him full in the face as he took it, but at the last moment her courage failed her. She looked away and did not see the instant but quickly mastered start of surprise. She was only conscious that Thorne had possessed himself of the document.

"What is it?" asked Thorne, holding it in his hand.

"That is what I want you to tell me," said the girl.

"Oh, don't you know?" said Thorne, now entirely master of himself.

"No," answered the girl, but there was something in her voice which now fully aroused the suspicions of the man.

"It appears to be a note from some one," he said casually, "but it is so dark in here. With your permission, I will light some of the candles on the table, and then we can see what it is."

He took one of the candles from the sconces on the wall and lighted the candelabra that stood on the nearest table. Holding the paper near the light, he glanced around rapidly, and then read it, giving no outward evidence of his surprise and alarm, although the girl was now watching him narrowly. He glanced at her and then looked at the paper again, and slowly read aloud the message:

"'Attack tonight!'" he said very deliberately. "Umph, 'Plan 3! Attack tonight, plan 3!' This seems to be in some code, Miss Varney, or a puzzle."

"It was taken from a Yankee prisoner."

"From a Yankee prisoner!" he exclaimed in brilliantly assumed surprise.

"Yes, one captured today. He is down at Libby now. He gave it to one of our servants, old Jonas, and—"

"That's a little different," said Thorne, examining the paper again. "It puts another face on the matter. This may be something important. 'Attack tonight,'" he read again, "'Plan 3, use telegraph!' This sounds important to me, Miss Varney. It looks to me like a plot to use the department telegraph lines. To whom did Jonas give it?"

"To no one."

"Well, how did you—"

"We took it away from him," answered Edith.

This was a very different statement from her original intention, but for the moment the girl forgot her part.

"Oh," said Thorne, "I think that was a mistake."

"A mistake?"

"Yes."

"But why?"

"You should have let him deliver it, but it is too late now. Never mind." He turned toward the door.

Edith caught him by the arm. Was he going out to certain death or what?

"What are you going to do?" she asked breathlessly.

"Find Jonas, and make him tell for whom this paper was intended. He is the man we want."

The girl released him, and caught her throat with her hand.

"Captain Thorne," she choked out, and there was joy and triumph in her face, "they have lied about you."

Thorne turned to her quickly.

"Lied about me!" he exclaimed. "What do you mean?"

He caught the girl's hands in his and bent over her.

"Don't be angry," pleaded Edith, "I didn't think it would be like this."

"Yes, yes, but what do you mean?"

Edith sought to draw her hands away from him, but Thorne would not be denied.

"I must know," he said.

"Let me go," pleaded the girl, "don't you understand—"

But what she might have said further was interrupted by the sharp, stern voice of the corporal outside. He spoke loud and clearly, there was no necessity for precaution now.

"This way! Look out for that side, will you?"

Thorne released the hands of the woman he loved and stood listening. Edith Varney took advantage of such a diversion to dart through the upper door, the nearer one, into the hall.

"Prisoner, Sir, Broke Out of Libby."

"I don't want to be here now," she said, as she flew away.

Thorne's hand went to his revolver which hung at his belt. He had not time to draw it before the corporal and the two men burst through the door. There were evidently others outside. Thorne's hand fell away from his revolver, and his position was one of charming nonchalance.

"Out here!" cried the corporal to one of the soldiers. "Look out there!" pointing to the doorway through which the two men instantly disappeared.

"What is it, corporal?" asked Thorne composedly.

The corporal turned and saluted.

"Prisoner, sir, broke out of Libby! We've run him down the street, and he turned in here somewhere. If he comes in that way, would you be good enough to let us know?"

"Go on, corporal," said Thorne coolly. "I'll look out for this window."

He stepped down the long room toward the far window, drew the curtains, and with his hand on his revolver, peered out into the trees beyond the front of the house.

CHAPTER IX.

The Shot That Killed.

A glance through the window showed Captain Thorne that the yard beyond, which had been empty all evening, was now full of armed men. The corporal had gone out through the hall door back of the house whence he had entered. There was no doubt but that the back windows would be equally well guarded. The house was surrounded, no escape was possible. He was trapped, virtually a prisoner, although, for the time being, they had left him a certain liberty—the liberty of that one large room! It was quite evident to him that he was the object of their suspicions, and he more than feared that his real affiliations had been at last discovered.

Apparently, there would be no opportunity now in which he could carry out his part in the cunningly devised scheme of attack. "Plan 3" would evidently result in failure, as so many previous plans had resulted, because he would not be able to send the orders that would weaken the position. The best he could hope for, in all probability, was the short shrift of a spy. He had staked his life on the game and it appeared that he had lost.

Nay, more than life had been wagered. He [illegible] knew the contempt in which [illegible] knew [illegible] them [illegible]

WOMAN AS FARMER

Miss Hilman Manages a Big Farm in Saskatchewan

To jump from a life of ease in Chicago society circles to take the full cares and responsibilities that go with the conducting of a 1,600 acre ranch in the Canadian northwest, have the handling of big quantities of wheat, over 100 horses and almost as many prize hogs, and to carry on the business of the farm until it is reckoned one of the most successful in its district is no small order for a man, but when the task is undertaken by a young lady, and successfully undertaken at that, it becomes even more wonderful.

Yet Miss Ruth M. Hilman, formerly of Chicago, where her father was a prominent railroader, and where the family was prominent in society circles, has accomplished the above. It is hard to imagine that she is the "boss" of 14 farmhands, and rules her ranch of 1,600 acres near Kesler, Saskatchewan, just as well as any practical farmer who has been brought up to the business. Sunburned a little, refined, and showing not the least embarrassment, Miss Hilman does not think she has done anything out of the way.

"There was no one else to do it," she says simply. "When my father died leaving my mother and myself and a young brother, I was the only one who could take charge. We either had to work the farm or sell it, and we decided to work it, and we have been successful. That's all."

And Miss Hilman likes farming. "It seemed to come natural," she said. "I was always interested in these things, and conducting the farm on a business basis I have found that it can be made to pay, and it is paying. In fact it paid from the start."

MLLE. CATRINA GELTZER

The fame of Mme. Pavlova is rivalled by Russia's latest recruit from the Imperial Theatre of St. Petersburg, Mlle. Catrina Geltzer. Mlle. Geltzer appears in a ballet called "The Dance Dream," and brilliant performances have won her a place in British hearts close to that held by Mme. Pavlova, star of the ballet.

KNOW WHAT YOUR IDEAL IS

First Step to Real Success, Though Few Seem to Realize Its Importance.

Several years ago when I filled a position which brought me many visitors each day, and many more letters in the same time, I was overburdened with requests for advice from persons who wished "to succeed;" "to accomplish;" "to attain." But, as strange as the statement may seem to you, I can truthfully say that not one per cent.—not one in a hundred of these earnest seekers was able to state exactly what he or she really wanted.

They were dissatisfied and discontented, and felt the vague urge of unrest pushing them forward to further endeavor and attainment—but it stopped right there. Ninety-nine out of every hundred did not know what they wanted. They asked not only for advice regarding the means of accomplishment and attainment, but also for information as to what they should really desire.

"Silly," you exclaim. Not a bit of it. I venture to say to you—you, you who are now reading these lines, are not much better off regarding clear-cut ideas and ideals. You want, and want and want, of course—but just what do you want? Have you a clearly defined idea, and a clear-cut ideal of the object of your desire? Honor bright now, have you?—William Walker Atkinson, in the Nautilus.

AMONG THE DANES

Live the Simple Life And Take Much Joy in it

Poverty seems to have no terror for the average Dane. The people appear to accept that condition as all in the day's work and confront it with a cheery determination to make the best of it without complaint. The Danish soil is, unlike our own, devoid of coal or minerals; there are therefore practically few manufactories, and in consequence much dependence is placed on farming, which may give a livelihood, but not—as we count them—riches. Incomes, even of Ministers of State, are small, and with limited means one can enjoy life thoroughly. The simple life is the one best known and liked; as we all know, simplicity of living in the Royal family of Denmark is proverbial. Life is taken with a joyousness not often seen, and family affection is very great. They are happiest in not being tied to stiff rules, and punctuality is not looked on as important. Mealtime is often a moveable feast, and paying a call at almost any time one can be prepared to find your friends at table. The staple of national food is bread and butter, but both are the best.

Cured My Cough In One Night

Relieved Me of a Throat Weakness That Resisted Every Treatment.

"SUFFERERS, FOLLOW MY PLAN"

"After being loaded down with a chronic hacking cough for months, you can imagine my joy at finding even a relief from it," writes Mrs. O. A. Tooker, of Monson, Mass., U.S.A. "I was troubled with an irritable throat weakness and asthma that simply defied every medicine I ever used. I was discouraged until a friend recommended Catarrhozone so strongly that I bought a dollar outfit from my druggist. I breathed in the healing fumes of Catarrhozone very deeply—used the inhaler five minutes every hour. After the first day I was better, and next morning my cough was gone. My asthma is cured, my throat weakness is gone, and I am well. For two years indeed, with the aid of Catarrhozone, I have kept perfectly well. I have also used Dr. Hamilton's Pills for constipation with grand results, and consider your remedies have done wonders for me."

Thousands of wonderful cures are reported every year. Catarrhozone does all that is claimed for it, and is certainly most efficient for colds, bronchitis, throat trouble, asthma and catarrh. The two months' treatment (large size), price $1.00, is guaranteed, smaller size 50c., sample size 25c., at all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Who Lost That Ring?

Yesterday evening a local citizen whose name by request is omitted, about four miles down the river, caught a seven pound muskinonge. On making an investigation in the lunge's department of the interior, he found a well preserved ring, set with two small stones. It is presumed that some young lady whilst on an "Esturion" moonlight excursion, "coyly yielding to a lovelike embrace, accidentally dropped the golden circlet overboard and that the hungry fish saw the moon's rays shin upon it.

Immigrants Were Too Remote.

A Times representative met Mr. Finch Miller, local Immigration Agent on Hunter street, going eastward. That official, when asked "Why that strained, tired look on your classic features?" replied "Oh I've only got to tramp out somewhere on Toncession street. Won't you come along?" Our reporter, however, who has to put in only 21 hours a day and was also looking worn out and tired, decided that a locality so near Warsaw was too far for him, even in the laudable purpose of assisting English immigrants to get a job.

A True Local Story.

A few evenings ago as the son of a well known local citizen of this city was going home, in the gloom of a side street, he passed a young lady, whose figure and "glad rags" caught his eye. "Ah, there! my baby! May I see you home?" said the young man. As the pair passed under the next arc light, the boy found his "pick-up" was a full fledged Mulatto, who is maid in a local home. With a sad lack of gallantry, the young man fled. This is an absolutely true story.

Lightning Lets Off Lindsay Lady

Miss Mary Flurey, of Lindsay, had a miraculous escape during the electric storm near her home. Miss Flurey crossed the street as the storm started to assume a threatening aspect, and dropped the bars to permit her father's driving horse to return to the stable. She had scarcely performed the feat when a large maple tree underneath which the animal has been standing and convenient to the bars which the young lady had a few second previously lowered down, was struck by the devouring fluid and twisted and splintered into matchwood. The fluid ploughed its way along through the ground and burned up a bunch of leaves, which ascended in a puff of smoke as if it were an explosion of gunpowder.

TRY SKIN ABSORPTION INSTEAD OF COSMETICS

(From the Woman Militant.)

The constant use of rouge and powder invites a coarsened, roughened condition of the skin, eruptions, enlarged pores and wrinkles. If you've learn this from experience, suppose you quit cosmetics and try what I recommend.

Ask your druggist for an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax and begin using this tonight. Apply like cold cream, washing it off in the morning. Keep this up for a week or two. The wax will literally absorb the coarse, colorless or blemished top skin, but so gradually as not to discommode you at all. Just as gradually the clear, velvety, naturally-tinted underskin comes to the surface. And mercolized wax becomes your everlasting friend.

For those wrinkles and large pores, make a face bath by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half-pint witch hazel. This has remarkable astringent and tonic properties, and beneficial results come quickly.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

29 WAYS OF HANDLING; ONE FOR "WHITE WINGS."

Chicago Street Sweepers To Go To School To Learn How To Weild Implement.

Chicago, June 17.—There are twenty-nine ways of handling a broom, but only one correct way, and this will be taught in a school for the men who sweep Chicago's streets, according to a plan recommended by the techical board of the bureau of streets. The experts state that the greatest efficiency in the "White Wings" can be obtained only by such an institution wherein will be taught the most practical way of utilizing tools and machines and the theory of scientific street cleaning.

The board calls attention to the many ways of using a broom as an example of the need of system.

6 POLICE PISTOL IN HAND HOLD A MOB

New Orleans, June 17.—Seven men were hurt, four of them shot, in a battle between 200 striking firemen and coal passers of the United Fruit Company and the police along the docks at the foot of Lafayette St. The strikers attempted to board the steamship Heredia to prevent its sailing with a crew of strike-breakers.

Captain John P. Boyle, acting superintendent of police, was near death when the mob attacked him in an attempt to release one of their number. Though he was struck over the head with a heavy bolt and his coat was nearly out off his back, the captain held his prisoner.

Louis Neumann, fireman on the steamship Marowijne, and Carl Paulus, a striker, were shot through the abdomen, and probably will die.

Forty-two men were arrested on charges of inciting a riot.

The strike began a week ago as a protest against a cut in firemen's wages by the company. While the police have been guarding the docks in constant expectation of trouble, the riot was the first outbreak on the part of the strikers.

The scheduled sailing of the Heredia for Colon at 11 o'clock was the thing that drew their attack. While the detail of five patrolmen, under Sergeant John Morgan, were watching the loading of baggage on board the vessel, when a mob of 40 yelling men, with a savage giant in blue overalls at its head, came swarming through the dock and over the lumber piles.

BRICKS AND BULLETS

A shower of bricks, stones, bullets and bolts went before them as an introduction.

The six police guarding the ship stood firm. Dodging the missiles, they began firing into the mob.

Four strikers fell, wounded. The mob swayed back. A roit call was rushed to headquarters, and, came to hand, the six held back the 200 until the roit call was answered a small army of bluecoats, with the acting superintendent at its head.

Sailors stood grimly at the head of the gangplank waiting to pull it up if the raging army got too close.

The riot began soon after 9 o'clock —before the passengers began to arrive.

A large number of honeymooners sailed on the Heredia. They arrived soon after the riot was quelled and gazed wonderingly as they carried their show-draped suitcases aboard between lines of policemen with short, wicked-looking shotguns in their hands.

THREE WOUNDED IN SALOON.

To guard against a second outbreak when the steamer sailed, the company loaded seventy-five nonunion coal passers and firemen on the tug R. G. Wilmot and slipped them aboard as the vessel dropped down the river at 11.45 a.m.

It was thought at first that only one man had been shot. Later three others were found in a room at 206 Julia street, the headquarters of the striking firemen. Joseph Ernst, owner of the saloon under the rooms, was arrested, his place locked up and a patrolman stationed at the door.

DID BRITISH TORIES FEAR DISINTERMENT OF SCANDALS?

This is Said to Be Reason for Gentle Terms in Motion Re Marconi Affair--Liberals Not at All Nervous About The Vote

London, Bune 18.—More members were out in the Commons' lobbies last night discussing the prospects of the Marconi fight than in the House listening to the languid debate on the Welsh bill. Considerable diminution in Tory confidence is noticeable: the Liberals are now at least a bit nervous about the division. The exceeding mildness of the terms of Cave's motion has rather surprised the Tory fire-eaters, and to soothe them, a yarn is being industriously circulated that the milk-and-water phraseology was adopted to seduce the Liberal waverers. This statement is sheer fudge. The gentle terms were adopted principally because the Tory leaders feared lest a more decided line of action should be followed by disinterment of certain scandals connected with the last Administration.

AUSTRALIAS OWN NAVAL FLEET WILL BE A REAL FIGHTING FORCE

Will be Ready by the End of August, and Then The Royal Navy Will be Withdrawn From Australian Waters--King to Visit the New Battle Cruiser

London, June 18.—The King will pay a strictly private visit to the new battle cruiser Australia at Portsmouth on June 30, prior to her departure for the Antipodes. The Government of Australia have appointed Rear-Admiral George Pate as Rear-Admiral in the Royal Australian navy, to command His Majesty's Australian fleet.

This appointment may be regarded as marking the birth of the Australian fleet as a fighting force. By the end of August, all the ships, except one cruiser ordered under the agreement of 1909, will be in Australian waters and complete in all respects They include the battle cruiser Australia, two light cruisers, Melbourne and Sydney and a small torpedo boat.

Australia Supports Her Own Fleet.

When the present agreement between the British and the Australian Governments terminates, the former will withdraw the ships of the Royal Navy from the waters of the Commonwealth, and the latter will cease to pay the subvention, originally amounting to £200,000, which hat been its contribution towards the cost of maintaining the local squadron. In the present year's Navy estimates £41,600 is shown to be payable by the Dominion. This is the last sum which will be received, as she will henceforth support her own fleet at a charge which, it is calculated, will in early years of development, amount to £75,000, apart from expenses of administration and training. Within a few years the Australian fleet will probably represent an annual charge of two or three millions sterling. This will tend to increase.

JOE MARTIN OBLIGINGLY HAS RESOLUTION ASQUITH LACKS

Makes Whole House Exonerate Lloyd George, Isaacs and Murray All the While Regretting They Cashed In on Marconi

London, June 18.—Despite the temptations of the Royal Cup Day at Ascot in glorious English June sunshine, interest in to-day's Marconi debate in the Commons was at high pitch.

Asquith's position was made awkward by the expectation of some 50 Radical supporters, who feel strongly that the House should formally declare the action of Lloyd George, Isaacs and Murray regrettable.

Asquith himself refrains from proposing the resolution, but Joseph Martin obliges with the following amendment to the Opposition motion: "This House accepts and approves the finding of the committee absolving the Ministers from any corrupt acts, but regrets that three members of the Administration purchased shares in the American Marconi Company, which was indirectly interested in the consumation of contract then pending between the Government and the British Marconi Company. It also regrets that Liberal party funds had been under the same circumstances invested in said shares, but this house completely exonerates the Ministers involved from having willingly or intentionally erred in the latter."

Feeling is pretty widespread among moderate men in all parties that any declaration of the House should include an express statement that all sections of the committee exonerated the Ministers from corrupt acts. This is not done in Opposition resolution.

THE PROPOSED NEW WATER SUPPLY RULES

Three different citizens called at this office yesterday to protest against the proposed civic legislation curtailing the hours for using city water for lawn purposes. A Times representative later on interviewed Water Commissioner W. H. Moore. Mr. Moore explained that the city's water supply has to be conveyed for miles through a 16 inch pipe. The friction from this limited pipe supply is tremendous. He noted that in London the average daily consumption, per capita, is 60 gallons whilst in Peterborough, per capita, every man, woman and child uses 200 gallons daily. As things are here at present, to keep up pressure and needed supply for railroads, watering carts, elevators, factories, etc., it would seem that the tentative legislation will have to be enforced.

On the other hand, Mr. Wise of the Little Lake Cemetery Co. told our reporter that if the proposed legislation is enforced, both the public parks and the cemetery will have to go dry. He said the civic appropriation will not provide for extra men working after six o'clock to water such places.

THE NORTH MONAGHAN COUNCIL IN SESSION

County Committee Rooms,
Peterborough, June 14, 1913.

All members of the council present Reeve W. G. Howden in the chair The reading of the minutes were dispensed with.

Mr. Geo. Moncrief came before the council and asked for a grant to be spent on the quarter line between Mr. Hogg and Mr. Lockie. He also asked the council to raise the wages of men and teams employed on the public highway.

The council informed Mr. Moncrief that they could not spend any money on this road at present as it was not a public highway. They also informed Mr. Moncrief that a deed of this road would have to be given to the Municipality before they could spend any of the peoples money upon it.

Mr. Fred Hickey came before the Council and applied for a license to run a refreshment booth and place of public entertainment on a floating pavilion just below the street railway wharf.

Moved by Mr. May, seconded by Mr. Morrow, that Mr. Hickey be given a license for the year 1913 for the sum specified in the by-law, namely: $20.00.—Carried.

Mr. C. J. Carroll came before the Council and urged them to have King George st. abd Wilson ave. graded as soon as possible.

A deputation from the Cavan council, consisting of Reeve Thorne and Councillors Baptie and Armstrong, waited on the North Monaghan council and asked that the two townships unite in repairing the gravel road from the Orange Hall, Fraserville, to where the work was done last year.

Mr. Baptie also called the attention of the gentlemen present to the need of repairs being done to the watering trough at Springville.

Reeve Howden assured the delegation present that North Monaghan was only too willing to do her share in having this road put in proper condition. Mr. Baptie called the attention of those present to the automobile traffic and suggested that something should be done towards getting some assistance from the Government for the maintenance of this main public highway.

Mr. Howden thought that automobiles should be licensed according to the horsepower of each machine, and the license money distributed for the maintenance of these main highways.

It was unanimously decided to leave the work of repairing the gravel road in hands of the two commissioners from North Monaghan, namely, Mr Geo Moncrief and Mr. Geo. Bidgood.

Reeve Howden agreed to interview Mr Peck, and Mr. Baptie agreed to interview Mr Preston, regarding the two municipalities applying to the Minister of Public Works, for a grant to be spent on the gravel road.

BILL LEGALIZING PUTS AND CALLS BE IGNORED BY CHICAGO TRADERS

Chicago, Ill., June 18.—A bill legalizing "puts" and "calls," recently passed by the Legislatare, will be ignored by the Chicago Board of Trade, and trading will be done according to a contract system devised by the Rules Committee at a meeting last night.

A draft of the contract which is said to eliminate the form of trading permissable under the puts and calls rules, will be posted to-day.

A member of the committee asserted that the bill was fostered by the Board's enemies and trading under its provisions never will be permitted He said that actual trading is desired and that future contracts, better classed as bids left open and offers left open, provide this.

CARRYING THE BRITISH FLAG INTO THE LAST UNKNOWN

Stefansson All Canadian Expedition Starts for the Arctic --Expedition Backed by Dominion Government

(Special to The Times.)

Ottawa, June 18.—Through the patriotic and financial assistance of the Borden Government there sails this week from Victoria the Stefensson expedition for the far north. The expedition is commanded by a Canadian—for Stefansson was born in Manitoba—is under the aegis of the Union Jack and as far as possible is manned by Canadians. It is the most thoroughly equipped expedition from a scientific standpoint which has ever left for the Arctic regions.

WHERE IT GOES.

Stefansson will explore the regions of the American continent which are new territories and the Canadian flag will be hoisted so that there can be no question or dispute as to the ownership of the far north. The expedition from a scientific and geographical point of view is regarded as of immense importance and that the Canadian government should have undertaken the work of financing and sending it north reflects much credit on the administration.

AMERICA AND ENGLAND JOIN IN PEACE PROPOSAL TO GERMANY

Story in London That Carnegie Was Envoy of Anglo-Saxon Nations to Emperor William--Proposal Was to Ensure Peace of Civilized World

London, June 18.—It was stated to-day on the best of authority that the conference on Monday of Andrew Carnegie with Emperor William of Germany had far more international significance than generally supposed. Carnegie, according to report, had official credentials of Great Britain and United States to make commencement of negotiations to form a Triple Alliance of Peace between these three nations, to establish and ensure peace of the civilized world.

It was believed when King George attended the recent royal nuptials in Berlin, he opened the way for Carnegie's representations for two great Anglo-Saxon nations. Accord to report the proposal is in the form of a ten-year agreement which will materially lessen proposed increases in armaments and guarantee peace and good-will between three nations, which practically means control of the destinies of the best part of the world.

LONDON DEFEATED PETES IN HARD FOUGHT GAME

The last game of the series with London went to the visitors yesterday. The Petes had another day off, that is some of them, not all, for some good fast ball was put up by some of the boys.

The fans were out in good numbers and cheered loud and long for the boys, but the jinx was on the Petes, and they just had to lose.

Sullivan, our third bagger, got a few real hard ones, but did not hold onto them long enough, lthough he woxked hard otherwise. Sargeant played his usual brilliant game, as also did Hilliard in the right garden, while he planted the ball very nearly off the lot every time he came up. But with all the brilliant playing of the Petes, London always happened to go one better, and kept on tallying the runs one by one, until the ninth innings, when they just got three runs, making the final scor 11 to 6 in their favor. Callahan in centre field dropped a couple of good looking flies, and got the fans howling for the derrick, but Davie didn't hear them. Sterling pitched a good steady game for the Petes, but the support was not forthcoming to back him up; while Trout behind the plate, worked hard and got a few more of those high foul flies that the visitors do not be able to get.

The Umps. came in for a strong word or two from the fans, when he handed out a few of those short-sighted decisions, all of which go towards losing a game.

Types practice to-night at Riverside Park. All interested are requested to be on hand.

DEAD MAN HAD TAKEN POISON--HOW, NOT SHOWN

Beemer of Drumbo, Had Been Killed by Strychnine, Doctor Says

Woodstock, June 18.—Dr. Woolner, in the Beemer case this afternoon, told the court of finding strychnine in the dead man's stomach.

"From his condition on Monday, had you expected death to follow on Tuesday?" asked the Crown Attorney.

"Most certainly not."

"Had you made up your mind then of the cause of death?"

"Almost positively my opinion after reviewing the symptoms and from what the neighbors told me, was that he died of strychnine poisoning.

"Strychnine resembles sals somewhat in appearance and is very bitter," the doctor added, "In the ordinary a person would not distinguish the poison if taken with salts."

"Did you search the house for strychnine?"

"No," said the doctor.

"Did you give a burial certificate?"

"I did not. The circumstances looked too suspicious."

Dr. Woolner said he had not ordered strychnine given in any form. The tablets he gave did not contain any of the poison.

"Did you give instructions in regard to the medicine to anybody but Mrs. Beemer?"

"I don't think so."

WHILST RACING TO SAVE GIRL MOTOR WRECK, 2 DIE

Sacramento Maiden Took Poison--Men Who Would Save Her Killed

Sacramento, Cal., June 18.—Racing for a hospital to save a young woman who has swallowed poison with suicidal intent, an automobile owned by Guy E. Pearce, of this city was wrecked.

Pearce was instantly killed.

Miss Vera Brennon, who had taken the poison, was fatally mangled.

Herbert Woodall, the chauffeur probably will succumb to his injuries.

The party had been attending a ball at Suburban Point. Miss Brennon, actuated by jealousy, attempted to end her life and Pearce volunteered to ber the unconscious young woman to a hospital here.

While going at high speed, the car struck soft earth at the side of the road and turned over three times. Pearce was a Sacramento business man.

THE CREW OF THE "ALGERINE" RESCUED.

The "Lucky" Scott expedition, when they arrived in Pond's Inlet in North Baffin-land, were surprised to see a number of men coming towards the ship over the hummock ice. It proved to be the crew of the SS. Algerine which had been crushed in the packice and sank within 20 minutes. The crew had only three barrels of biscuits which they saved from the ship, to keep them alive for the twelve days they had been on the ice, and had given up all hope of rescue. This is shown in the moving pictures taken by the "Lucky" Scott party. They will be shown at the Princess Theatre, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Do not miss seeing them.

TRAIN BANDITS BATTLE WITH POLICE, LOSE FORTUNE

Two Masked Men Hold Up I. C. Diamond Special--Dynamite a Safe

Springfield, Ill., June 18.—Two masked bandits held up the Illinois CentralD iamond Special en route to Chicago from St. Louis, ten miles south of here early this morning, fought a pitched battle with a posse of Deputy Sheriffs and city policemen from Springfield, who came upon them while dynamiting the safe in the express car, and escaped after themselves running the engine to a point near the city limits of Springfield.

The train was brought to Springfield early to-day and an examination of the express car showed the bandits obtained nothing of value, the explosion of dynamite having failed to open the through safe which contained $25,000.

Line Up "Cop" and Reporter.

In addition to fighting a pitched battle with the officers the bandits captured a policeman and a newspaper reporter and lined them up beside the express car with the messenger and curious passengers who came from the coaches of the train to ascertain the cause of the stop. No one was injured by the shots as far as known.

The engine and express car were cut off from the rest of the train by the train crew at a point of revolvers. Conductor McWilliams on seeing the engine and express car pulling away from the train started to investigate. A little father down the tracks towards the city he heard an explosion and he hastened to the home of a farmer and gave warning.

CLAIMS OIL WILL NOT HURT ANY RUBBER TIRES

Yesterday a well known engineer of this city called at the Times office and made serious objections against the proposed oiling of our local streets. He maintained that such use of oil would result most disastrous with bicycle and automobile tires. He said that any kind of oil must necessarily destroy rubber.

As a result of his complaint, a Times representative went to see the City Engineer. This civic official listened most courteously and attentively to our representative and replied "Something has got to be done to allay the dust nuisance. We have arranged to get oil, that will permanently allay the dust. We got a kind of oil that is absolutely guaranteed not to injure rubber. The oil ingredient that destroys rubber is mainly sulphur. All sulphur is eliminated from the oil we propose to use. In oil at 9 cents a gallon there is about 40 per cent. of asphalt and in 10 cent oil about 60 per cent. This, with elimination of the deleterious sulphur, will result in an innocuous covering over the dust strewn streets.

WINNER VICTORIA CROSS IS NOW IN THE CITY

Few, possibly, of our readers know what the real meaning of the "Victoria Cross' conveys. This simple little bronze cross is awarded to British troops, as noted on the cross "For Valor." It is the highest recognition made in the Imperial service for valor. The humblest private, non-com, up to a brigadier general may earn this decoration for conspicuous bravery on the field of battle.

There is in Peterborough a gentleman whose native land has honored him with this token of her esteem: This is Major Ed. Holland, who won the decoration in South Africa, during the Boer War. The Major, who knew Mr. "Chil" Turner of this city in Africa, is a tall man with features of classic mould. His home is in Prescott. Major Holland, who was connected with a Scottish regiment, won his Victoria Cross at Lalyfontein by saving the British guns. He is here managing the Polar Expedition pictures now at the Princess theatre.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 15c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaprilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

CANADA'S PULPWOOD

Huge Quantities That Would be More Valuable if Manufactured

Fifty-six per cent. of the pulpwood cut in Canada during the year 1911 was exported to the United States. This is the fact shown by statistics collected by the forestry branch of the department of the interior.

The total quantity of pulpwood cut in Canada during 1911 was 1,520,227 cords. The quantity exported amounted to 847,939 cords, while the remaining forty-four per cent. (672,288 cords) was manufactured in Canada.

The value of this pulpwood was $3,240,592, an average of $6.39 per cord. Had the wood been retained in Canada and manufactured here, it is estimated that the value would have been increased to about $15,000,000.

Had Canada manufactured into wood-pulp all the pulp-wood she produced, she could have had enough to supply a hundred and twenty-[illegible] mills of the average size of those operating in Canada, instead of the fifty-four she now has. Quebec [illegible] have supplied sixty per cent [illegible] mills than she is now doing [illegible] Brunswick could have [illegible] number of her mills.

Transvaal Gold.

The value of the gold output of the Transvaal for the year 1911 has been reckoned at $170,000,000. This was an increase in value over the previous year of more than $140,000,000. It is estimated that the gold output of the Transvaal for the year mentioned constitutes almost, if not quite, 38 per cent. of the output of the whole world for the same year. In 1910 the proportion was 33 per cent., so it will be seen that the South African gold mines are steadily improving. The dividend distributed from the 1911 output reach ed the princely sum of $37,779,067.

BEFORE TREATMENT

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience: "I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the NEW METHOD TREATMENT and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

CURE BY SNAKE VENUM

On many occasions it has been noted that epilepsy has been cured fortuitously by the bite of a venomous snake. In France the cure has been known to occur after a bite by a viper, and in America after a rattlesnake's bite. Dr. Self, of Clairith, who has published an account of a case of the latter, states that it occurred with a man aged thirty-five subject to epilepsy for fifteen years, who, after being bitten by the rattlesnake, was fortunate enough to survive, and never had another fit of epilepsy.

Another American physician, Dr. Spangler, of Philadelphia, who for some time had used sterilised and diluted snake venom in the treatment of certain affections of the respiratory passages, was induced by the above fact to try the same means against epilepsy.

The injections are practised in the thick part of the muscles of the forearm alternately on each side. Their frequency should vary not only according to the character of the fit but also according to the duration of the local reactional symptoms.

Dr. Spangler has had occasion to experiment with this mode of treatment in sixty-two cases, of which thirty-six have been kept under observation for a length of time sufficient to allow the results obtained to be considered as permanent. Sometimes before the intervals between fits became longer it is noticed that milder attacks tend to replace the more violent forms.

A twelve-year-old boy named John Loughran, living at Ship Terrace, Dumbarton, Scotland, was presented with a Royal Humane Society's certificate, and a silver watch and cheque for $25 from the Carnegie Hero Fund trustees, in recognition of his bravery in rescuing a father and his four-year-old daughter from drowning in the River Leven. Loughran had been instrumental in saving four lives previously in Belfast and one in Port Glasgow.

Cook's Son and Duke's Son

Sir James Sievewright, of Tullialian, opened a bazaar in the Drill Hall, Lochgelly, Scotland, on behalf of the Lochgelly Curling Club and Tennis Club. Sir James laid emphasis on the value of healthy physical exercise. Curling was a grand old Scottish game. Cook's son and duke's son could meet on an equality on the ice.

Scottish Poets' Corner

At a meeting of the Dunedin Association in the Freemason's Hall, Edinburgh, Sheriff Guy delivered an address on "A Scottish Poets' Corner." He referred to the suggestions made by Mr. William Chambers in his history of St. Giles' that a poets' corner should be set aside in St. Giles' Cathedral similar to that in Westminster Abbey, and advocated that the proposal be carried out.

LONG LIVED FAMILY

Six Out of Ten Attained Average Age of 85 Years

There died at Pendleton, Prescott county, Ontario, Mary McLean, widow of the late Maurice Shane, aged [illegible] years. At Lochaber in the county of Labelle, Quebec, a week later, Margaret McLean, Widow of the late Malcolm McCallum, aged 90 years, passed away.

Six out of ten of this family, now deceased, attained the average age of 85 years, and the youngest of the surviving four who is Lieutenant-Colonel Archibald McLean, of Cummings Bridge, Ottawa, is in his seventy-third year.

Their father, the late Hugh McLean, Sr., of Pendleton, emigrated from the Isle of Mull, Scotland, with the first brigade of Lord Selkirk's settlers to Red River settlement in 1811, and reached Fort Garry in August, 1812.

Dr. Boyce's History of Red River Settlement shows that when the settlement was attacked and destroyed by the servants of the Northwest Company in 1816, their dwellings burned and crops destroyed, with Governor Miles taken prisoner, that John McLeod, with three men, James Macintosh, Archibald Currie, servants of the Hudson's Bay Company, and Hugh McLean, a settler, after all the others had deserted and gone over to the enemy, fought and held Fort Douglass for three days and succeeded in beating off the enemy and saved the Hudson's Bay Company's store.

BAN ON BIG TRUNKS

Baggagemen Wearied of Handling Them as Big as Small Cottages

Railway baggage agents in Canada and the United States have decided that the long trunk must be banned as far as possible from the baggage car. The Canadian agents have received the sanction of the Dominion Railway Commission to place discriminatory charges on all trunks more than forty-five inches long, and they are waiting for the conceding of permission to the railways of the Republic to do likewise by the United States Railway Commission before putting the new regulations in force in Canada.

For a long time the baggagemen groaned at the constant encroachments of a part of the travelling public in the size of baggage, and consequently on the available space in the baggage car. Their patience became exhausted with the introduction into use of the huge wardrobe trunk.

SURVIVALS AND REVIVALS

Can a nation "come back"? The ferment now going on in France, material as well as intellectual, has a suggestive bearing on the question of ethnic futures. It used to be supposed that, like individuals, races and peoples also have their cycle of growth, maturity, and death. The hypothesis was held to account, not only for the disappearance of various human societies that once made a noise in the world, but also to justify predictions as to the ultimate fate of those now in existence. Some political systems of the past, either submerged by the conqueror or wholly refashioned by the immigrant, have certainly lost the place they once held on our maps. Yet we have ancient races with us still, and there is promise of revival for quite a numb?r of modern peoples who not very long ago were visibly on the decline.

This is a great age for "empire building." The hunt for native baggage yet remaining to be shouldered as the white man's burden is by no means over. But the sense of nationality in both subject and dominent peoples, seems to grow by the very inroads made upon it and the perils it must guard against. It is a new factor to be counted with in both Egypt and India. The Persians are blundering definitely, if slowly, along the road towards modern life; even the Turk may revive as well as survive, if he has only wit enough to put his old wine into new bottles. Italy has just made a bid for a larger "place in the sun" than she has enjoyed for a century past. Spain also seems minded to set her house in order. "'Tis Greece—but living Greece no more," cannot be said of the renascent Hellenic peoples to-day. Never were the qualities which enable races to "come back" better displayed than in the Balkans. And these examples of national revival cannot be multiplied. I

In ancient times, when the individual lost his foothold, there was no chance for him; in these days a thousand-handed social system is ready with the means of uplift. A similar process seems to come in as a sort of Providence for nations. No longer living in comparative isolation, they form parts o, a great world system of co-operating units, all of which are necessary to each, each of which is necessary to all. They receive the assimilative push ensured by intercourse and the stimulus offered by example. Unless they choote it, or it is forced upon them, there is no natural cycle which prevents recovery from decay. And even "in their lowest state" as Ernest von Lasauix said, "the appeal may be made to them—Why will ye die?"

"I Sleep Soundly, Feel Like New"

ALL WHO LACK VIGOR, THOSE WHO ARE DISPIRITED AND WORN OUT SHOULD READ THIS CAREFULLY

Proof That Health and Renewed Vitality Quickly Return When Right Remedy is Used.

"I am only thirty years old, yet for almost two years I have felt more like seventy-five. I have found it difficult to sleep at night, and in the morning felt so depressed and heavy that effort was difficult. My hands were always clammy and perspiration on slight effort would break out all over me. It was not unnatural that I should begin to brood over the chance that I should be unfit to do my work, and this dread made my sleepless nights perfect misery. After repeated trials of medicines and mixtures, Dr. Hamilton's Pills gave me the first gleam of hope. From the very first I could see they were different in action from other pills. They didn't gripe and acted as naturally as if nature and not the pills were cleansing my clogged-up system. My spirits rose. I felt much better. The sluggish action of the system gave way to normal activity. Dizziness and headaches ceased, appetite, good color and ambition to work returned, and have remained. I am like a new man, and I thank Dr. Hamilton's Pills for it all."

This was the experience of J. E. Parkhurst, a well known grocery dealer in Jefferson. Follow his advice, use Dr. Hamilton's Pills for your stomach, kidneys and liver, and you'll enjoy long life and robust good health. All druggists and storekeepers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, 5 boxes for $1.00, or postpaid from the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

MY LITTLE BOY THAT DIED.

Look on his pretty face for just one minute,
His braided frock, his dainty buttoned shoes,
His firm shut hand, the favorite plaything in it,
And tell me, mothers, was't not hard to lose
And miss him from my side,—
My little boy that died?

How many another boy as dear and charming,
His father's hope, his mother's one delight,
Slips through strange sicknesses, all fear disarming,
And lives a long, long life in parents' sight?
Mine was so short a pride,
And then my poor boy died.

I see him rocking on his wooden charger;
I hear him pattering through the house all day;
I watch his great blue eyes grow larger and larger,
Listening to stories whether grave or gay,
Told at the bright fireside,—
So dark now, since he died.

But yet I often think my boy is living,
As living as my other children are;
When good-night kisses I all around am giving,
I keep one for him, though he is so far,
Can a mere grave divide
Me from him, though he died?

So, while I come and plant it o'er with daisies
(Nothing but childish daisies, all year round),
Continually God's hand the curtain raises,
And I can hear his merry voice's sound,
And feel him at my side,—
My little boy that died.

A FREAK AUTO

The "Snail" Car Latest French Fad Buts It's Not Slow

The "snail" car is the latest product of the French automobile maker's shop. The name has no reference to the speed of the car, but is a description of its appearance when coming, head on. The French seem to have turned their particular attention to the making of freak automobile shapes during the last few years, the idea being to get as much of the car under cover as possible and thus keep out the dust.

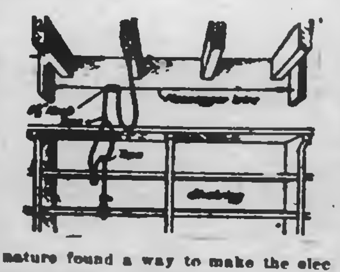
LOOKS LIKE A SNAIL OR A FROG BUT IT REALLY IS A FRENCH HIGH SPEED AUTOMOBILE.

In the "snail" car this object seems to have been accomplished to perfection. The headlights are continuations of the front mudguard which is built in as part of the hood over the engine so that there are no sharp corners or crevices for the dust to penetrate. The car attracted great attention at the Paris automobile show.

LIGHT CELLAR SHELVES

This Simple Arrangement Easy For Electric Light Users

Getting a jar of preserves from the shelf in the dark cellar storeroom is a racking ordeal. It is frequently impossible to see the label on the jar at a far corner when the light is fixed at the other end of the shelves. A bright young man of an ingenious nature found a way to make the electric light travel to any portion of the shelves.

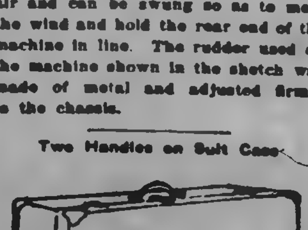


The electric lamp was attached to the ceiling socket with a long flexible wire. A piece of galvanized wire was stretched tightly overhead the entire length of the shelves and a porcelain insulator was slipped over this wire. The flexible wire was then looped over the insulator with enough slack left between it and the socket to permit the insulator to slide to either end of the shelves. It was simple, effective and absolutely safe.

Rudder Prevents Auto Skidding

Hundreds of deaths have been caused and many horrible accidents resulted from the skidding of automobiles on wet streets or when going at high sped around curves. A thoughtful French autoist has had great success with a device, which is nothing more nor less than a huge rudder attacked to the rear of the machine which presents a large surface to the air and can be swung so as to meet the wind and hold the rear end of the machine in line. The rudder used on the machine shown in the sketch was made of metal and adjusted firmly to the chassis.

Two Handles on Suit Case



The suitcase in a crowd is always a problem—that is, it becomes a problem if a little attachment is not made for handling it that eliminates the difficulty. The trouble is caused by the size of the case and the way it projects in front of and behind the person carrying it.

Just attach a handle to the end, like that on a trunk, and when in a crowd carry the case by this end handle. There are no projections then.

POLO.

London, June 18.—Viewed by the special correspondents of the London papers, who cabled long reports of the British team's defeat at polo by the Americans, the challengers' work received considerable criticism.

The Times this morning says: "It is evident that the British forwards failed to take advantage of their opportunities. Even with this failure, however, they would probably have held their own if they had been able to withstand the onslaught of the American forwards in the first period."

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent says: "The English team lacked direction. They were far from showing the brilliant game they put in at practice before the match. It was not only the offense that was weak, but the defense as well; and the majority of the American goals were the result of errors combined with the more aggressive tactics of the Meadowbrook team. When the English carried the ball up to the American goal poor stick work invariably spoiled good dribbling."

New York, June 18.—The gate receipts of the two games of the International Polo Cup series amounted to over $200,000—a greater sum than has ever been taken in during two days of baseball in the world's series. The exact figures were $95,000 at Tuesday's game and $106,000 at the second contest on Saturday.

The expenses are understood to be about $25,000, leaving a net profit of $176,000. What the American Polo Association will do with the balance has not yet been determined. About 60,000 persons saw the two matches at prices ranging from $25 for some of the boxes to $2 for seats in the grandstand and fifty cents in the field.

RING.

A medical examination which Alf. Saunders, the game and clever B. U. A. C. boxer recently underwent, has revealed the cause of constant pains in his left side as proceedings from three broken ribs, which injury followed a fall from the ring on the first night of the Canadian amateur boxing championships held in April at the Arena.

In spite of that injury, Saunders fought on the two succeeding nights, and was finally outpointed by champion Jack Harris, after a contest which many onlookers set down as the finest of Saunders' ring career.

San Francisco, June 18.—Willie Ritchie, lightweight champion pugilist, and Joe Rivers, of Los Angeles, has formally signed articles for a twenty-round championship contest in this city on the afternoon of July 4.

The men agreed to weight 134 pounds ringside. The forfeit for not making the weight was fixed at $2,500.

The final barriers to the fight were removed after an hour's conference between Promoter Eddie Graney, Billy Nolan, representing Ritchie, and Joe Levy, manager for Rivers. It is understood Ritchie is to receive $17,500 for his services, win, lose or draw.

CINDER TRACK.

George Dinning, the Cumberland England, runner, who won this year's modified Marathon at Powderhall, Scotland, spreadeagled the field in the French professional cross-country championships at Juvisy. He ran the ten and one-half miles in 58.00 4-5, and his nearest rival, Jean Vermeulin, was 11:55 1-5 behind him. Hans Holmer quit in the third round in the circuit, and is said to have been ill. Billy Queal, who was beaten by Dinning in the Scottish fifteen-mile race, challenged Dinning to a five or ten-mile race for $500 a side, and they probably will run a five-mile race in England in July. There also is a possibility that Dinning will come to this country and race.

TURF.

New York, June 18.—Determined to follow their announced policy of keeping the sport at Belmont Park race track as clean as possible, the Jockey club has instructed its stewards to keep a weather eye upon several "undesirable patrons" said to have been in attendance at races since the track opened this year.

The stewards have been told to turn away all persons previously ruled off the turf. Six men, two of whom are said to have developed the faculty of "knowing just which horse will win" will be "given the gate" upon their first appearance at the track if the club's orders are carried out.

ARCTIC KINDNESS

Stefansson, the explorer, tells of the remarkable hospitality with which he and his party were received by one of the strange tribes of Eskimos, whom they encountered, says Harper's. "When we had entered the house the boiled pieces of seal meat had already been taken out of the pot and lay steaming on a sideboard. On being assured that my tastes in food were not likely to differ from theirs, my hostess picked out for me the lower joint of a seal's foreleg, squeezed it firmly between her hands to make sure nothing should drip from it, and handed it to me, along with her own copper-bladed knife; the next most desirable piece was similarly squeezed and handed to her husband and others in turn to the rest of the family. When this had been done one extra piece was set aside in case I should want a second helping, and the rest of the boiled meat was divided into four portions, with the explanation to me that there were four families in the village who had no fresh seal meat. The little adopted daughter of the house, a girl of seven or eight, had not begun to eat with the rest of us, for it was her task to take a small wooden platter and carry the four pieces of boiled meat to the four families who had none of their own to cook. I thought to myself that the pieces sent out were a good deal smaller than the individual portions we were eating, and that the recipients would not get a square meal; but I learned later that night from my two companions that four similar presents had been sent out from each of the houses where they were eating, and I know now that every house in the village in which any cooking was done had likewise sent four portions so that the aggregate must have been a good deal more than the recipients could eat at one time. During our meal presents of food were also brought us from other houses. Each housewife apparently knew exactly what the others had put in their pots, and whoever had anything to offer that was a little bit different would send some of that to the others, so that every minute or two a small girl messenger appeared in our door with a platter of something to contribute to our meal."

PRAISES THE ROSE

A Flower for Which Canada is Well Adapted

E. T. Cooke, of the National Rose Society of England, in an address in Toronto said: "Canada can grow roses; that has been proved by many a skilful amateur. To-day there are rose gardens here which can hold their own with those across the sea. It is our aim to increase the love of her beauty and to scatter rose gardens of all kinds, large and small, throughout the length and breadth of the land. The rose is a wild flower of the mountains and plains of Canada. The wind carries over many a moorland and mountainside the fragrance of sweet briar, and the glorious crimson from a thousand lips of the beautiful rose Lucida is seen in rough places when the cool light of early winter days floods over the land; therefore, let us intertwine the rose among our emblematic maple leaves, which form for it a fitting surrounding."

FOSSIL BONES

These Found Near Calgary Believed to be 3,000,000 Years Old

Fossil bones which J. L. Wagner, a farmer in the Canadian Northwest, discovered in the Red Deer River canyons near Calgary four years ago and which he casually reported on a later visit to the American Museum of Natural History, New York, are on exhibition for the first time at the museum as an almost complete skeleton of a crested dinosaur, a reptile 32 feet long and 15 feet high. It is placarded as probably 3,000,000 years old, the reptile having existed when the Canadian Northwest had a sub-tropical climate. This particular species of the reptile has hitherto been unknown, and it has been scientifically named the Saurolophus Osborni.

HISTORICAL DOCUMENT BROUGHT TO LIGHT

Death Warrant of Marie Antoinette, Gay But Ill-fated French Queen Found in an Old Trunk

Marie Antoinette's death warrant, fatal relic of the tragic romance of a gay, famous French queen, was found in a dusty old garret in Washington, D.C.

The long lost document which sent Louis XVI's widow to her death on the guillotine in 1793 was picked out of a trunk, unopened for forty years.

Placed in the Public Archives in Paris and stamped with the seal of the legislative section of the national document room, the death warrant of Marie, the Austrian, remained in its glass case for four years following her death. One day Henri Samson the public executioner who officiated at the guillotine when the head of Marie was severed—Oct. 16 1793—walked through the halls of the temple. He saw the order for the death of Marie Antoinette and extracted it from its case together with the smaller slips of paper.

From that time until a few months ago the warrant was lost to the world.

MARIE ANTOINETTE

Marie Antoinette was charged with causing the reckless expenditure of the national finances and fomenting civil war. By many writers this remarkable woman has been depicted as the victim, the sainted martyr, almost, of the revolution. Others have taken an opposite view, dealing sharply with her character and her role in French history.

Marie Antoinette was the youngest daughter of Emperor Francis I. and Maria Theresa of Austria. She was born at Vienna Nov. 2, 1755. At 14 she was betrothed to the French Dauphin and married him a year later at Versailles.

The queen's unpopularity originated in her personality, which soon aroused the ire of the populace. Her levity of disposition, girlish love of fun, fine dress, banquets, etc., added to a lamentable incapacity to see the actual misery of France, were fatal to her.

The death warrant, translated into English reads as follows:

IN THE NAME OF THE REPUBLIC.

"The prosecuting public attorney of the Revolutionary Criminal Court, established at Paris by the act of March 10, 1793, in execution of the judgment of the court of this day, requires the commanding general of the Parisian armed force to give assistance and to put on foot the public force necessary for the execution of the said judgment rendered against Marie Antoinette Lorraine Autriche (Austrian), widow of Louis Capet, and which condemns her to the penalty of death, which execution shall take place to-day at 10 a.m. in the Place de la Revolution in this city. The commanding general is required to send the said public force from the courthouse yard on the said day at 8 a.m. precisely.

"Given at Paris on the twenty-fifth day of the second year of the French Republic, one and indivisible. (Old style, Wednesday, October 16, 5 o'clock in the morning).

Public Prosecuting Attorney,
(Signed) A. L. FOUQUIER."

BILLIONS OF BIRDS IN PIGEON FLIGHT

John James Audubon's Vivid Account of the Passenger Pigeon—A Bird now Extinct

The world is indebted to John James Audubon, the great naturalist, for what is perhaps the best account of the passenger pigeon ever written. And his truthfulness and scientific accuracy make it a story to be accepted at its face value. He relates that in the Autumn of 1813 he left his house at Henderson, on the banks of the Ohio, to go to Louisville. In passing over the Barrens a few miles from Hardensburgh he observed pigeons flying from the north-east to the south-west, in greater numbers than he had ever seen before. After they had been passing for about an hour he dismounted, seating himself on an eminence and made a dot with a pencil for every flock that passed. In a short time he found that he was putting down dots at the rate of 163 in twenty-one minutes. He resumed his journey and still pigeons came; the light of day was darkened as if by a solar eclipse. Like a torrent, and with the roar of distant thunder, they gathered in a solid mass, darting forward with the wings of the wind in undulating and angular lines, descending and sweeping close to the earth, then mounting perpendicularly so as to resemble a vast column, and when high in the air once more, wheeling and twisting within their continued lines, which then resembled the coils of a gigantic serpent.

Billions of Birds

For fifty-five miles Audubon traveled on to Louisville, with the pigeons still flying overhead, the flight continuing for three days. Each flock followed exactly the course of its predecessor. If the first flock had swooped nearer the ground or swerved aside the next flock did the same. Audubon made an attempt to calculate the numbers of pigeons that flew past in that memorable flight, and if he did not succeed he made the most scientific effort to do so that is recorded. He estimated that the pigeons flew in columns about a mile wide, on an average, though later on he expressed the opinion that his estimate was unduly conservative. He also calculated the rate of flight to be sixty miles an hour. On this basis the birds passing in three hours would cover an area of 180 square miles, and counting two pigeons to a square yard the total would work out at about a billion and a quarter. How many there would be in a three-days' flight can thus be calculated by anyone who will not fear to look the result in the face.

Audubon made further investigations and calculations of the passenger pigeon. For example, he estimated that as each pigeon consumed half a pint of food a day the billion and a quarter birds in the three-hour flight would consume 9,000,000 bushels in a single day. At this rate the birds he saw in those three days would consume the total grain crop of Canada in less than a week. As a matter of fact, while the passenger pigeons ate grain most of their food grew wild, and they were no such blight to agriculture as might be supposed, although the pigeoners, a class of hunter that grew up when the flocks were greatest, represented themselves as public benefactors when they slaughtered the birds wholesale. There was a famous roosting place of the passenger pigeons upon the Green River, which Audubon visited. He estimated that the forest where the birds passed the night was forty miles long and three miles wide.

Fattening Hogs on Pigeons

On one of his visits he reached the roosting grounds two hours before sunset, and a fortnight after the birds had established themselves. There were crowds of hunters waiting for the birds to return from their foraging excursions, among them a farmer who had driven a herd of 300 hogs more than a hundred miles in order to fatten on the pigeons that would be slain. The forest itself looked as though a hurricane had visited it. Trees two feet in diameter had been broken down by the sheer weight of the roosting birds. Great branches everywhere had fallen. When the pigeons began to return the noise of their wings was such that the report of a gun could not be heard a few feet away. The hunters dared not venture into the woods for fear of being killed by falling limbs, broken off by the birds. Waiting on the edge of the wood, they killed them by the thousand, plucked and salted them on the ground, and loaded up great wagons with the meat, which was later shipped away. In the last great killing in Michigan in 1878 three hundred tons of dressed birds were shipped out. Even against this wholesale slaughter the birds made headway, until the pigeoners called upon the telegraph to assist them. By this means the hunters informed each other of the approach and progress of flights, with the result that the pigeons would be followed for hundreds of miles and billions of them killed. These methods, continued for a few years, led to the absolute extermination of the birds.

Two Plucky Feats

Two gallant acts in one day brought an appropriate acknowledgment at a Woolwich court, when the coroner presented William Youngman, an excavator, with the certificate and bronze medal of the Royal Humane Society.

A boy was drowning in the river and a man who went to his rescue also got into difficulties. Youngman jumped into the water with all his clothes on and rescued both.

An hour later Youngman was passing the same spot and hearing that two boys had just gone under, he again plunged into the water. After diving repeatedly he had to relinquish his efforts.

On nine previous occasions he was instrumental in saving lives.

BLUE BLOODED FARMERS

French Nobleman Will Grow Fruit at Forest

Among the vocations open to members of the European peerage farming in Canada is assuming a foremost position. British Peers have entered into farming near Pickering, and now Viscount George De Mauduit, a prominent French nobleman, and son of Count Hugh De Mauduit, director of the staff of the Ministry of the Interior, Paris, has left his native country to take up a fruit farm at Forest, Ont. His intention is to purchase a farm in the vicinity of Forest at $36,000.

The idea of farming was brought before him while he was living in London, England, by the Commissioner of the Ontario Government in the Metropolis.

OFFICIAL STANDARDS BUILT IN THE WALL

Official Pound Weight And Yardstick of Great Britain Guarded Like the Crown Jewels

One of the queerest and most important of all the ceremonies that are gone through in England is the unearthing and examining of the contents of an extraordinary box buried in the masonry which forms the public staircase of the House of Commons, and thereby checking the weights and measures used in Great Britain. This ceremony is performed once every twenty years.

To get at the box which is of oak, it is necessary to pull down part of the wall of the staircase. Then, after the casket has been exhumed and its unique contents examined with infinite care by a band of scientists, it is again put back in the cavity of the wall, which then is built up.

The box contains two pieces of metal. One of them is a cube of plantinum measuring only one inch along each side; you would buy another like it for about $200, but this particular cube has a value beyond all other pieces of metal. The way in which it is guarded gives some idea of its worth. To begin with, it is carefully wrapped up in a specially prepared paper uncommonly soft in texture, and is laid in another silver-gilt case. This case goes into yet another made of stout bronze, which fits into a sturdy mahogany box, firmly screwed down, and in addition, sealed in a particular way.

The other thing in the box is a rod of bronze. It is carefully protected too, and is placed on eight rollers in another mahogany case. This case is securely screwed together and carefully sealed. Both these mahogany cases are put in a special casket made of lead, firmly soldered and perfectly air-tight. There is still another covering, however, the leaden casket being fitted into the oaken one already mentioned. This is of specially selected wood, and is sealed in such a way that its contents are kept absolutely intact. It fits exactly into the cavity of the masonry of the staircase.

The two queer pieces of metal which are guarded with such sacredness are the standards of the British weights and measures. They always remain of the same value. The standards which were first used came to grief in 1834, in the fire at the House of Parliament, and it took many men of science many long years to compute and manufacture the existing two pieces of metal. The one inch cube of platinum, though so small, weighs a pound. The bronze rod is thirty-eight inches long and has two studs of solid gold to measure off the yard. Two lines cross these gold studs, and at a certain temperature and pressure of the air, the distance between these fine lines is the standard of British measures.

When the ceremony of examining the standards comes off, they are not touched by hands, but are held in special tongs. One of the most delicate balances known is used in weighing the cube. The yard is measured with the utmost exactness, a powerful microscope being used, and other delicate measurements are made including that of the temperature and of the height of the barometer.

MARRIED AND DIDN'T KNOW IT

New Indian Agent Got Into Predicament Through Ignorance of a Native Custom.

On the old Rosebud Indian reservation, in South Dakota, they still laugh over the peculiar predicament into which a new Indian agent once got himself.

The agent, an unqualified "tenderfoot," was inspecting an Indian school. Noticing that as soon as he entered the room every girl present brought her hair forward over her face, he asked the teacher to tell them to throw it back so that he might see their faces. But this they refused to do, until, after much urging, one girl did finally uncover her face.

After school was over, the agent wondered at the strange actions of the girl who had uncovered her face. She followed him to his house, entered after him, and set about getting his dinner. As he spoke no Sioux, and she no English, he could get no explanation from her.

Finally, to his relief, the teacher rode up. Shaking with laughter, he asked the agent how he liked his new wife! Then the latter understood what he had done. In certain tribes of the Sioux Indians all a man needs do in order to get a wife is to induce a girl to uncover her face. The agent had proposed in the usual way—and been accepted.

In vain did the agent plead that he already had a wife in the east; there was only one way to get out of it. It cost him the equivalent of fourteen ponies to persuade the Indian girl's father to take her back again.

CHEAP DIVORCES

They Can be Had for a Very Small Fee or for Nothing

Cut-rate separations, marked down severances of matrimony, bargain sales of single bliss—what a wonderful lot of inducements might be offered to mis-mated couples if they could be induced to take their marital woes to Africa! For instance, the women of the Ingalwa tribe who are tired of their husbands do not have to worry for six months, a year or two years, held in onerous leash until a judge condescends to sign a decree. Instead they simply nag their husbands until they induce the irate gentleman to give them a good beating.

Once a drop of blood flows, it is all off. Back to mother goes the wife, taking with her a good share of marriage offerings and becomes a divorcee without any more ado. In Tunis, any man with $1.20 can get his freedom any time he wants it.

The Arabs and the Moors probably hold the divorce record. In Sudan there are Arab men who have been married 40 or 50 times within ten years. The female of the species cannot boast of such record. The best they are usually able to do is 20 marriages in a decade. This is because the customs and conventionalities decree that a divorcee shall wait three whole months before becoming a blushing bride again, while her former husband can re-marry the day he is free if he so desires.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 2. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith [illegible] while the prisoner is sent for. An [illegible] comes from General Varney for Wilfred to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

And there was even more than honor upon the board. His love! Not the remotest idea of succumbing to the attractions of Edith Varney ever entered his head when he attempted the desperate, the fatal role. At first he had regarded the Varney house and herself as a chessboard and a pawn in the game. The strength of character which had enabled him to assume the unenviable part he played, because of his country's need, for his country's good, and which would have carried him through the obloquy and scorn that were sure to be visited upon him—with death at the end—did not stand him in good stead when it came to thoughts of her. Until he yielded to [illegible] passion and broke his self-imposed vow of silence, he had fought a good fight. Now he realized that the [illegible] would accept his affections would compromise herself forever in the eyes of everything she held dear, even if he succeeded and lived, which was unlikely.

The Yard Was Full of Armed Men.

He had never, so he fancied, in the least and remotest way given her any evidence that he loved her. In reality, she had read him like an open book, as women always do. He had come there that night to get the message from Jonas, and then to bid her good-bye forever, without disclosing the state of his affections. If he succeeded in manipulating the telegraph and carrying out his end of the project, he could see no chance of escape. Ultimate detection and execution appeared certain, and any avowal would therefore be useless. But he had counted without her. She had shown her feelings, and he had fallen. To the temptation of her presence and her artless disclosure, he had not been able to make adequate resistance.

He was the last man on earth to blame her or to reproach her for that; but the fierce, impetuous temperament of the man was overwhelming when it once broke loose, and he felt that he must tell her or die.

Because of his iron self-repression for so long he was the less able to stand the pressure in the end. He had thrown everything to the winds, and had told her how he loved her.

Out there in the moonlight in the rose arbor, the scent of the flowers, the southern night wind, the proximity of the girl, her eyes shining like stars out of the shadows in which they stood, the pallor of her face, the rise and fall of her bosom, the fluttering of her hand as unwittingly or wittingly, who knows, she touched him, had intoxicated him, and his love and passion had broken all bounds, and he had spoken to her and she had answered. She loved him. What did that mean to him now?

Sometimes woman's love makes duty easy, sometimes it makes it hard. Sometimes it is the crown which victors wear, and sometimes it is the pall that overshadows defeat.

What Edith Varney knew or suspected concerning him, he could not tell. That she knew something, that she suspected something, had been evident, but whatever her knowledge and suspicion, they were not sufficiently powerful or telling to prevent her from returning love for love, kiss for kiss. But did she love him in spite of her knowledge and suspicion? The problem was too great for his solution then.

These things passed through his mind as he stood there by the window, with his hand on his revolver, waiting. It was all he could do. Sometimes even to the most fiery and the most alert of soldiers comes the conviction that there is nothing to do but wait. And if he thinks of it he will sympathize with the women who are left behind in times of war, who have little to do but wait.

The room had suddenly become his world, the walls his horizon, the ceiling his sky. At any exit he would find the way barred. Why had they left him in the room, free, armed, his revolver in his hand?

None but the bravest would have entered upon such a career as he had chosen. His nerves were like steel in the presence of danger. He had trembled before the woman in the garden a moment since; the stone walls of the house were no more rigidly composed than he in the drawing-room now. It came to him that there was nothing left but one great battle in that room unless they shot him from behind door or window or portiere, giving him no chance. If they did confront him openly he would show them that if he had chosen the secret service and the life of a spy he could fight and die like a man and a soldier. He held some lives within the chamber of his revolver, and they should pay did they give him but a chance.

Indeed, they were already giving him a chance, he thought to himself as he waited and listened. He was utterly unable to divine why he was at liberty in the room, and why he was left alone, or what was toward.

In the very midst of these crowding and tumultuous thoughts which ran through his mind in far, far less time than it has taken to record them, he heard a noise at the window at the farther side of the room, as if some one fumbled at the catch. Instantly Thorne shrank back behind the portieres of the window he was guarding, not completely concealing himself but sufficiently hid as to be unobserved except by careful scrutiny in the dim light. Once more he clutched the butt of his revolver swinging at his waist. He bent his body slightly, and even the thought of Edith Varney passed from his mind. He stood ready, powerful, concentrated, determined, confronting an almost certain enemy with the fierce heart and envenomed glance of the fighter at bay.

He had scarcely assumed this position when the window was opened, and a man was thrust violently through into the room. At the first glance Thorne, as yet unseen, recognized the newcomer as his elder brother, Henry Dumont. Unlike the two famous brothers of the parable, these two loved each other.

Thorne's muscles relaxed, his hand still clutched the butt of his revolver, he was still alert, but here was not an enemy. He began at once to fathom something at least of the plan and the purpose of the people who had trapped him. In a flash he perceived that his enemies were not yet in possession of all the facts which would warrant them in laying hands upon him. He was suspected, but the final evidence upon which to turn suspicion into certainty was evidently lacking. He could feel, although he could not see them, that every door and window had eyes solely for him, and that he was closely watched for some false move which would betray him. The plan for which he had ventured so much was still possible; he had not yet failed. His heart leaped in his breast. The clouds around his horizon lifted a little. There was yet a possibility that he could succeed, that he could carry out his part of the cunningly devised and desperate undertaking, the series of events of which this night and the telegraph office were to be the culmination.

A less cautious and a less resourceful man might have evinced some emotion, might have gone forward or spoken to the newcomer, would have at least done something to have attracted his attention, but save for that relaxation of the tension, which no one could by any possibility observe, Thorne stood motionless, silent, waiting; just as he might have stood and waited had he been what he seemed and the newcomer been utterly unknown and indifferent to him.

His brother was dressed in the blue uniform of the United States; like the others it had seen good service, but as Thorne glanced from his own clothes to those of his brother, the blood came to his face, it was like seeing his own flag again. For a fleeting moment he wished that he had on his own rightful uniform himself and that he had never put it off for anything; but duty is not made up of wishes, gratified or ungratified, and the thought passed as he watched the other man.

Henry Dumont had been thrust violently into the room by the soldiers outside. He had been captured, as Arrelsford had said, earlier in the day; he had allowed himself to be taken. He had been thrust into Libby prison with dozens of prisoners taken in the same sortie. He had not been searched, but then none of the others had been; had he been selected for that unwonted immunity alone it would have awakened his suspicions, but the Confederates had made a show of great haste in disposing of their prisoners, and had promised to search them in the morning. Therefore Henry Dumont had retained the paper which later he had given Jonas, when by previous arrangement he made his daily visit to the prison.

He had been greatly surprised, when about a quarter to nine o'clock a squad of soldiers had taken him from the prison, had marched him hurriedly through the streets with which he was entirely unfamiliar, and had taken him to the residence section of the city, and had halted at the back of a big house. He had asked no questions, and no explanations had been vouchsafed to him. He was more surprised than ever when he was taken up to the porch, the window was opened, and he was thrust violently into a room, so violently that he staggered and had some difficulty in recovering his balance.

He made a quick inspection of the room. Thorne, in the deeper shadows at the farther end of the room was invisible to him. He stood motionless save for the turning of his head as he looked around him. He moved a few steps toward the end of the room, opposite his entrance, passed by the far door opening into the back hall which was covered with portieres, and went swiftly toward the near door into the front hall. The door was slightly ajar, and as he came within range of the opening he saw in the shadows of the hall, crossed bayonets and men. No escape that way!

He went on past the door toward the large windows at the front of the house and in another moment would have been at the front window where Thorne stood. The latter dropped the curtain and stepped out into the room.

For the thousandth part of a second the two brothers stared at each other, and then, in a fiercely intense voice, Thorne, playing his part, desperately called out:

"Halt! You are a prisoner!"

Both brothers were quick witted, both knew that they were under the closest observation, both realized that they were expected to betray relationship, which would incriminate both, and probably result fatally for one and certainly ruin the plan. Thorne's cue was to regard his brother as the prisoner whom it was important to arrest, and Dumont's cue was to regard his brother as an enemy with whom it was his duty to struggle. The minds of the two were made up instantly. With a quick movement Dumont sought to pass his brother, but with a movement equally rapid Thorne leaped upon him, shouting again:

"Halt, I say!"

The two men instantly grappled. It was no mimic struggle that they engaged in, either. They were of about equal height and weight; if anything, Thorne was the stronger, but this advantage was offset by the fact that he had been recently ill, and the two fought therefore on equal terms at first. It was a fierce, desperate grapple in which they met. As they struggled, both by a common impulse, reeled toward that part of the room near the mantel which was farthest away from doors or windows, and where they would be the least likely to be overheard or to be more closely observed. As they fought together, Thorne called out again:

"Corporal of the guard, here is your man! Corporal of the guard, what are you doing?"

At that instant the two reeling bodies struck the wall next to the mantel with a fearful smash, and a chair that stood by was overturned by a quick movement on the part of Henry Dumont, who did not know his brother had already received the important message. In the confusion of the moment, he hissed in Thorne's ear:

"Attack tonight, plan 3, use telegraph! Did you get that?"

"Yes," returned Thorne, still keeping up the struggle.

"Good," said Dumont. "They are watching us. Shoot me in the leg."

"No, I can't do it," whispered Thorne.

All the while the two men were reeling and staggering and struggling against the wall and furniture. The encounter would have deceived the most suspicious.

"Shoot, shoot," said the elder.

"I can't shoot my brother," the younger panted out.

"It is the only way to throw them off the scent," persisted Dumont.

"I won't do it," answered Thorne, and then he shouted again:

"Corporal of the guard, I have your prisoner!"

"Let me go, damn you!" roared Dumont furiously, making another desperate effort—"if you don't do it, I will," he added under his breath. "Give me the revolver!"

"No, no, Harry," was the whispered reply, and "Surrender, curse you!" the shouted answer. "You'll hurt yourself," he pleaded.

"I don't care," muttered Dumont. "Let me have it."

His hands slipped down from Thorne's shoulders and grasped the butt of the revolver. The two grappled fiercely, but the struggle was beginning to tell on Thorne, who was not yet in full possession of his physical vitality. His long illness had sapped his strength.

"Don't, don't, for God's sake!" he whispered, and then shouted desperately: "Here's your man, corporal, what's the matter with you?"

"Give me that gun," said Dumont, and in spite of himself his voice rose again. There was nothing suspicious in the words, it was what he might have said had the battle been a real one; as he spoke by a more violent effort he wrenched the weapon from the holster and away from Thorne's detaining hand. The latter sought desperately to repossess himself of it.

"Look out, Harry! You'll hurt yourself," he implored, but the next moment by a superhuman effort Dumont threw him back. As Thorne staggered, Dumont turned the pistol on himself. Recovering himself with incredible swiftness, Thorne leaped at his brother, and the two figures went down together with a crash in the midst of which rang out the sharp report of the heavy weapon. Instead of shooting himself harmlessly in the side, in the struggle Dumont had unfortunately shot himself through the lung.

Not at first comprehending exactly what had happened, Thorne rose to his feet, took the revolver from the other's hand, and stood over the body of his mortally wounded brother, the awful anguish of his heart in his face. Fortunately, they were near the far end of the room, next the wall, and no one could see the look in Thorne's eyes or the distortion of his features in his horror.

Sour Milk Griddle Cakes

Into a quart of clabbered milk stir a quart of flour, two well-beaten eggs and a teaspoonful of salt. Mix thoroughly. Then add as much flour as will be needed to make a good batter. Last of all add a teaspoonful of baking soda dissolved in a tablespoonful of hot water. Bake at once on a very hot griddle.

The two-piece tunic overblouses continue to show apron and postillion effects.

THE DEATH ORCHID

Explorer's Weird Story of Mysterious Flower of Venezuela

The death orchid of the Venezuelan Indians has been proved to be no mere campfire yarn. Three years ago an orchid hunter, Grayson, set out to find "El Lugar de las Flores Venenosos," that is, "The Place of the Poisonous Flowers," which was said to be located in the dense and pathless wilderness occupying the vast stretches between the head waters of the Orinoco and the Andes.

Two weeks passed without any incident out of the ordinary. But one morning there was a perceptible smell of flowers in the air. When the orchid hunter and his Indians camped that night the jungle smells had been entirely lost in the cloying scent. Many of the band refused to go further.

As Grayson and the others proceeded the rankly sweet and oppressive odor became stronger, attacking the senses like a narcotic. One after another of the remaining Indians collapsed, till only Grayson and the guide were left pushing forward.

The orchid hunter felt as if he were being attacked by the insidious power of opium, but retained enough consciousness to become aware that, gleaming through the trees ahead, he saw flowers of huge size and livid colors, many hued clusters of them hanging in trails. It was the death orchid.

When he recovered his senses he found himself being carried back to camp, where the rest of his porters had remained. Many of the band were severely sick, and many half-witted with the continued effect of the scent.

HON. J. R. STRATTON

NEW MARINE INSTRUMENT

Valuable Invention of Officer on Canadian Boat to Measure Distances

Chief Officer Edwin Landy, of the C.P.R. liner Montcalm is the inventor of an instrument which seems destined to become as indispensable and as valuable in the marine world as the range finders which are used in the army.

This invention known as the "Distabeam," makes possible the calculating to within the one hundredth part of a mile of any stationary object being passed by a ship.

If, for instance, the steamer with a "Distabeam" on board wishes to find the distance away of a lighthouse signal station, or other building, the angle made by the intersection of an imaginary line drawn from the ship to the object to be distanced and the ship's line of travel, enables the desired result to be obtained with mathematical accuracy.

In order to demonstrate his invention while his vessel was in Montreal harbor, Mr. Landy took a line first on the Ile Ronde lighthouse and later on the spire of Longueuil Church. Measurements on an official chart of he channel after the tests disclosed the fact hat the "Distabeam" had got the distance to within a few yards.

PTOMAINE POISONING

Boiling Does Not Kill The Deadly Germ in Food

The outbreaks often known as "ptomaine poisoning are divided by Dr. L. Burger of Berlin into three classes. In the first, minute bacteria resembling the typhus bacillus are the cause of poisoning, and may have infected living cattle, etc., or may have been brought by rats, mice, flies or impure water to meat, fish, bread, cake, vegetables and other food.

Eating the infected food sometimes gives rise to symptoms of intestinal catarrh, sometimes to those of typhus or cholera.

The second class of poisoning result from eating decayed meat and other foods, and is quite rare, because warning is usually given by a foul odor. In neither of these classes is the poisonous principles destroyed by boiling.

The third kind of meat poisoning, which has been called "sausage poisoning" in a recent Berlin epidemic, is due to a specific rod-shaped organism, the bacillus botulinus, and may come from infected ham, salt fish, tinned meat, etc.

This bacillus does not grow in living flesh, so only the poison it has developed in dead meat is to be feared. This is very fatal, however, and forty per cent. of the poisonings result in death.

PREMIUM ON BABIES

Australia Will Give a Bonus to Each New Arrival in Family

The Australian Federal Labor Government has made it part of its legislative program to pass a law making a grant of $25 as maternity allowance on the registration of every birth. The scheme has been received with enthusiasm by the working classes throughout the Commonwealth, and it is believed that the measure will become a law, although the Liberals will support it only as it shall pertain to needy cases.

A member of the Opposition is said to be drafting a bill which shall place a tax upon childless families, so that the public funds shall not be drawn on in payment for the maternity grant.

Both these projects of law have been introduced in France, but without a sufficient backing to promulgate them.

Stuffy Feeling About The Nose Relieved At Once

Tells How to Cure Hawking and Spitting, and Drive Out Catarrhal Colds.

Isn't it miserable to have a stuffed-up feeling in the nostrils — to be scarcely able to draw a full breath. When Catarrh gets into the nose you're bound to know something is radically wrong.

A dead sure cure, and a simple one to use, is Catarrhozone; you just breathe it—that's all. You see Catarrhozone Inhaler sends healing piney vapors through the nose, throat and lungs, and these antiseptic soothing vapors are death to colds or Catarrh.

Thousands testify every year that nothing ever discovered will cure a cold, or help the throat like Catarrhozone. Mr. Everett L. Wasson, of Blair, N.B., writes:—"About five years ago I took a cold in the head, and Catarrh set in. It kept increasing by leaps and bounds. I kept putting off getting anything until I at last I found I would have to. After trying several things I heard of your remedy, "Catarrhozone," and procured a bottle and began using it. I was not long in finding out I had struck the right thing. I am recommending Catarrhozone to all who have Catarrh, etc."

Catarrhozone is the greatest remedy for colds, etc., since people began to have colds. Get the dollar package and let the whole family use it. Medium size, 50c.; sample size, 25c. All storekeepers and druggists or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Ont.

A young man paid Lippincott's fine. When brought down stairs the late defendant still showed marked symptoms of a too excessive zeal in putting alcohol "out of sight." When asked "Do you know where you are?" He replied, "Well, I think I'm in the coop." "In what coop?" "Why I think this is Havelock, isn't it?" The discussion was closed on a suggestion of Mr. Cook, that amendment be made to the resolution, providing that present arrangements made for the cheese supply, be allowed to stand this year. A committee was appointed to draft a resolution embodying this provision.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Health and Beauty Advice

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

Katie: I advise you to use this formula for a hair-tonic, because to my personal knowledge it does more for the hair and scalp than anything else and is easy to make: Into ½ pint alcohol pour 1 ounce quinzoin and add ½ pint water. This quinzoin tonic quickly stops the itching and cures the dandruff and is soothing to a sore or tender scalp. The regular use of this inexpensive tonic corrects dry, scaly conditions or excessive oiliness, because it makes the scalp and hair-sacs healthy; and to dull, brittle, faded hair will give a brillance and softness, as well as restore the former color. For best results it is well to shampoo with canthrox. (See answer to "Lelia").

Lydia: Yes, rubbing pyroxin on eyebrows will induce them to grow thick and glossy. Apply pyroxin at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger and they will grow long, silky and curly. This treatment is unfailing, but be careful not to get any pyroxin where hair is not wanted.

Mabel P.: A thick paste made of delatone and water and applied to those hairs for 2 or 3 minutes will entirely dissolve them. After the delatone is removed the skin should be washed and dried. This is quick, harmless and in no way mars the daintiest complexion. You must, however, be sure it is delatone you get.

Bertha: Yes, exercise and dieting sometimes reduce your weight. An easier and better way is to dissolve the unnecessary fat-tissues with the aid of the parnotis treatment. This reducer is made by adding 4 ounces parnotis to 1½ pints hot water. When it cools, take one tablespoonful three times each day. Keep up the parnotis treatment regularly and in a short time you will have gotten rid of the annoying fat and your figure will be gracefully plump and rightly proportioned and the skin with be tight and smooth.

Laura: You dull eyes will take on a delightful sparkle and expression when 2 or 3 drops of a crystos tonic are put in them daily for awhile. It is an old-fashioned and very economical remedy which also soothes the burning and relieves the aching after one or two applications. It is simply fine for granulated lids. To prepare, dissolve an ounce crystos in 1 pint cold, clear water and it is ready. It is absolutely harmless under all conditions.

Lelia: In a case like yours where the scalp is so sensitive I should use canthrox. Get from your druggist an original package and dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water and your shampoo is ready. You will find canthrox shampoos very beneficial, because they remove every trace of dust, dandruff, excess oil and leave the scalp and hair-roots healthy and vigorous. Canthrox is beneficial to the finest head of hair and to dull, streaky, lifeless or brittle hair gives a fluffiness as well as restores the natural color.

Zoe: Loss of appetite and that bilious cast to your skin plainly indicate a derangement of your liver and kidneys. Prepare this excellent and inexpensive tonic and take a tablespoonful three times a day: Into half pint of alcohol put one ounce kardine (do not use whiskey) and to this add half cupful sugar, then hot water to make a quart. This tonic will quickly correct the liver and kidney troubles, and as a blood-purifier and system-tonic it has no equal. It is also greatly beneficial to people suffering from lack of vitality, and its regular use will give to a blotchy, pimply skin a rich color, healthy and delightful clearness.

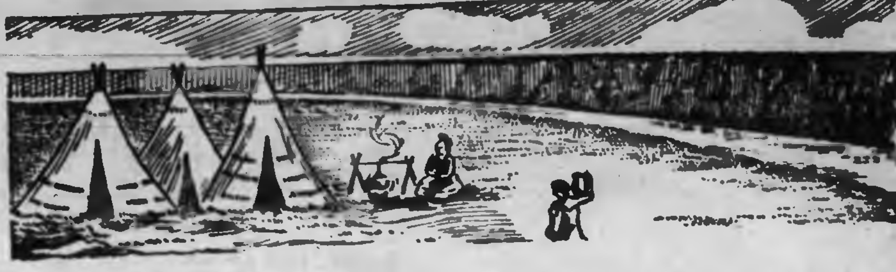
Dorothy: It is a pleasure to know that you are so well pleased with quinzoin as a hair tonic. I have great faith in a spurmax lotion, because it is far superior to powder and will surely overcome the shiny, "muddy" condition of your skin. Just get 4 ounces spurmax from your druggist and dissolve it in ½ pint witch hazel or hot water and add 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. When the spurmax lotion is on it cannot be detected, and it lends an exquisite rosetint and youthful charm to any complexion. Once you try this lotion you will much prefer it to any powder you ever used. It is especially nice for tan or freckles.

Cora H.: To remove wrinkles, I use this purely vegetable product which I make at home. It is unlike creams containing animal fat as it does not grow hair nor make the flesh loose. Just dissolve an ounce of almozoin, which you can get from any druggist, in ½ pint water, and add 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. Stir and let stand for one day. To remove wrinkles apply a thick coat of this cream jelly and leave on over night. This protects the skin and allowsall the blood action to be used in constructing new tissue. In the morning wash it out of the pores and massage thoroughly [illegible] of the cream. It makes the skin soft and velvety, while it is unequalled in reducing large pores.

YOU CAN MAKE MONEY IN

Carmangay

"The Star of Alberta"



PAST The splendidly strategic site of Carmangay was discovered by a far seeing, shrewd railway engineer attracted to the district by the lure of the finest wheat in the Canadian West. He snapped up lands where the wide canyons of the Little Bow River narrows to a point. Here must all railways cross. The C. P. R. came and the shipping centre created went ahead by leaps and bounds.

PRESENT Carmangay today is a thriving incorporated town, with not less than 53 business places. Her up-to-date electric and natural water supply systems are owned and operated by the people. Carmangay boasts an eight-roomed schoolhouse, two banks and four big elevators, shipping over a million bushels in 1911 and 1½ millions in 1912. Carmangay has coal mines operating, and the entire district is underlaid with coal of finest Galt quality.

FUTURE Carmangay grows as Alberta grows. That means a wonderful future. Four new railroads are heading for Carmangay. Four new elevators are trying to cope with the tremendous wheat yields of the district. The mines are opening up splendid prospects. Carmangay is being rapidly developed into one of the greatest towns in the Canadian West. YOU can just as confidently invest in Carmangay as her own people do, who are building in brick and stone for a tremendous future. Carmangay has her own supply of finest brick clay and stone right at her doors, and will soon supply her sister cities in Alberta.

FEELING OF UNREST REPORTED IN THREE OVERSEA'S COLONIES

Egypt, India and South Africa Fretting Under Secret Arms it is Said--Preaching Rebellion in South Africa

London, Bune 19.—Bad news for England comes from three points where flies the British flag over seas—Egypt, India and South Africa. Lord Kitchener is relied upon to suppress the unrest on the Nile, but there is grave fear that the Indian conspiracy and the South African quarrel have been allowed to drift so far that desperate measures will have to be used before long.

"At Bombay, Calcutta and Delhi, Hindus and Mahommehans are openly arrayed, shoulder to shoulder, pledged to work against the Sakiba for the regeneration of our common motherland." The passage is quoted from a speech delivered at a recent congress of the All Indian Moslem league which has attracted pained attention in England and among the British Indias. Officials of the Indian government are heard to declare that unless something is done there will be another cataclysm, worse even than the terrible Sepoy mutiny. England's attitude toward the Turk is being used as a torch with which the Indian Mahometans hope to light the fires of revolution; and it has all the signs of reaching fruition in deeds of desperation.

IN SOUTH AFRICA.

In South Africa the old blood feuds are being revived between Boer and Briton; this notwithstanding the able statesmanship of General Louis Botha, the premier, who is loyally doing his best to play the part of the peacemaker. The storm has been deliberately provoked by Mr. Stein, an exile from the Cape for some years, who has reappeared on the scene of his former triumphs and subsequently overwhelming defeat. He has turned the purely personal quarrel between General Botha and General Herzog, a Boer member of the cabinet, who was asked to resign following anti-British intrigue, into a "paramount issue" at Johnabbesburg, Pretoria and Cape Town. Feeling is at high pitch and General Botha has advised a strong increase in the British forces at the cape "to be prepared for evenualities."

Bible In Schools

Australia has Bible-reading without note or comment in its public schools, and any parent can have his child with-drawn during the reading if he so wishes. The United States is looking the same way, and wondering why it cannot have something of the kind. The reading of the Scriptures was done away with to meet the objections of the Roman Catholic Church, and now that church is fighting the public schools because they are "godless." Why should not the Bible be read?

THE GIANT OF THE SEAS ROYALLY GREETED IN GOTHAM

World's Biggest Boat Looked Like a Huge Hotel With Lights Ablaze--Worked Up Narrow Channel

New York, June 19.—With her bands playing, pennants flying, and greeted by salutes from every craft in the harbor, the new giant of the seas, the Hamburg-American liner Imperator, steamed up the bay and docked at Hoboken to-day. The deep base whistles and sirens of the Imperator bellowed a reply to the shrieking welcome of smaller boats and tugs which appeared as waterbugs beside the monster steamer.

All the way up the bay, tugs hovered near the Imperator. It was not believed they would be needed, but no chances were taken.

Between Tompkinsville and Liberty Island, there is but three hundred feet steerage way in the channel, and this was considered the most dangerous place for the Imperator to pass. Because of the size of the new boat, the roof of the Ham-burg-American pier had been opened, and elevated stages built, so that their gangplank ma- be lowered.

EIGHTY WOMEN DONE TO DEATH, BURNED BY MOB

Enraged at Importation of Cheap Girl Labor, Take Terrible Revenge

St. Petersburg. June 19.—Eighty women were burned to death to-day by villagers enraged at the importation of cheap girl labor to work on a sugar estate in the district of Piriaton in the Province of Poltava, southern Russia, according to the Kiev newspaper Kiev Lianin.

The excited villagers first securely fastened all the means of exit from a wooden barn in which the girls were housed. They then set fire to the building while the inmates were still asleep, and all were burned to death without a chance of escape.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Mostly fair and a little higher temperature.

CHAS HEALY COMMITTED FOR TRIAL FOR THEFT

At yesterday's police court, a young man named Chas. Healy was charged with horsetheft.

The first witness, Charles Fife, who lives in Otonabee, some 12 miles out, said he got drunk two weeks ago. He was here from Saturday until Tuesday. The horse he drove belongs to the Fife estate. On Tuesday afternoon, he went part of the way home with a friend, and returned at 7 o'clock. He met the prisoner in town and the latter drove out with him. He had been to a liquor store. He remembered going into East City, but forgot everything else until he found himself in the home barn. His brother asked "Where did you get that old skate?" referring to a strange horse that he had driven home. His own horse is worth $175. He never traded horses. He does not know where Healy lives. He brought $44 to town and had $8.25 when he got home. He met Healy about 9 p.m. He drove back for two bottles of whiskey and a pair of boots he had forgotten. He again forgot the boots but got the whiskey. He remembers Healy gettin- into the rig but forgets everything else.

George Fife, a brother of the last witness, said the latter drove to town with a little bay horse on Saturday. He next saw Charles asleep in their rig, at the barnyard Wednesday. The harness was theirs but the horse was not. The horse was of no value. Charles acted as though he had been doped. He, the last witness, drove to town and was told the old chestnut was Jim Healey's. He went to Healey's place. Healey said his son, the prisoner, had gone to Lindsay. If he sold the horse, he, the son, would go to Hamilton. Witness said he left the old nag at Healey's. Healey was arrested in Havelock. Witness got his horse there. Prisoner claimed he had made the trade with witness, and said he had paid witness $35 to boot. He has bought better horses for $2 than the chestnut.

Healey was committed for trial.

HOSPITAL NURSES WERE DULY INSTALLED

Last night the big Conservatory of Music Hall was well filled, when the Graduating exercises of the class of 1913 were held.

GRADUATES.

The graduates were the Misses Grace E. Crowe, Sara J. Wood, and Elda B. Walsh. A fine musical program was rendered by the Conservatory Orchestra. Mr. Richard Hall most efficiently acted as chairman. Rev. T. J. Mansell delivered an inspiring address to the nurses. Presentation of bandaging prize was made by Dr. McPherson. This was followed by affirmation and conferring of diplomas. The medals were then presented.

LINE TO BE SECOND TO NONE IN CANADA

Ottawa, June 19.—Under the new management of the Intercolonial Railway it is the intention to make the road as fine as any in Canada. Hon. Frank Cochrane found the line in a very much run-down condition. Business during the past year has been growing at a tremendous rate.

Contracts have been let for the following rolling stock to be delivered this year: 1,050 cars, 28 cabooses, 100 flat cars, 5 colonist cars, 8 first-class coaches, 4 first-class separate compartment coaches, 100 coal cars, 3 baggage cars, 8 sleepers, 2 diners, 30 passenger and freight locomotives.

MAN MILITANT JUMPS AT HORSE IN RACE, IS KILLED

Ascot, June 19.—Fired by the recent example of Miss Emily Wilding Davison during the race for the Derby, a male suffragette to-day committed suicide by flinging himself in front of August Belmont's four-year-old Tracery during the race for the valuable Ascot gold cup, and deprived the horse of any chance of capturing the coveted trophy.

The man was killed on the spot. The horse and its rider although they were both brought to the ground were unscratched. Waving a flag of the suffragette colors in one hand, and brandishing a revolver in the other, the militant suffragist sprang over the rails just as the field of eight horses with Tracery leading were nearing the straight for the run home.

Witn a loud yell of "stop!" he bounded in front of the horses and Tracery collided with and felled him before the jockey, A. Whalley, had time to avert the catastrophe.

Builder of Dirigibles Denies Six Are Under Contract for Vienna Army

Friedrichshafen, Germany, June 19. Count Zeppelin to-day declared that he was pledged not to accept any foreign orders for dirigible airships. His company, he said, would construct dirigibles only for the German Government or for use in Germany. He denied the report published in Vienna that he had contracted to build six airships for the Australian army.

Two Air Men are Killed.

Berlin, June 19.—Two German airmen were killed at an early hour this morning at the Johannisthal aerodrome in the suburns of the Capital.

Aviator Kraftet, carrying as a passenger, a man named Gerbitz, had ascended with the intention of making a two hours' flight. There was practically no wind and the biplane was making good speed when it suddenly turned a somersault at a height of a hundred feet, throwing the aviators to the ground where they were picked up dead.

KILLS FIANCEE AND HIMSELF

Acting Chief Wireless Operator at Portsmouth, N.H., Shoots Girl on Street.

Portsmouth, N.H., June 19.—Robert White, acting chief wireless operator at the wireless station at the navy yard here, shot and killed his sweetheart, Jennie Wade, aged 16, and then killed himself at 10.30 this evening.

The crime was committed on South street at the head of Wibird street after White had followed Miss Wade from the centre of the city in an automobile. With Miss Wade at the time of the shooting were Oscar and Bernard White, of this city, no relation of the suicide, who were walking home with her.

The girl was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wade of Lafayette road, and she had been keeping company with Robert White for some time. In the past few days they had had some disagreement and last evening they had made up while he was visiting her home.

She, according to White' friends, had agreed to remain at home this evening, but instead went to the motion pictures. Robert White, her slayer, saw her go into the hall, and went in and sat in a seat a few rows behind her, and after watching her for some time went out and got his revolver and lay in wait.

When the pictures were over Miss Wade came out with Bernard and Oscar White and started to walk home, the two brothers accompanying her. Robert White, as soon as they left, hired a public automobile, driven by Eugene Hutchins, and told the driver to follow the three ahead, and they trailed along after them for a distance of nearly a mile.

At the head of Wibird street, a quiet residential district, the automobile ran by the girl and her escort and stopped and White jumped out of the car and stepped in front of them. With the words, "you have had a fine walk," he opened fire, his first shot taking effect and pierced the heart of the girl. She dropped and he fired two more shots neither of which took effect and then turned the gun on himself, missing the first shot over his ear but the last shot entered his head over the right ear, killing him instantly.

When he began firing, according to Bernard White, he said "clear the way" and both Bernard and Oscar White jumped to one side and ran down the street, never looking back until they were out of danger. They immediately gave themselves up at the police station.

Hutchins, the driver of the car, jumped from the automobile when White began firing, but before he could reach him he saw the girl drop, and then saw White turn the revolver on himself and fall. The girl was breathing when he reached her, and he ran to the home of Harry T. Philbrook and telephoned the police and a doctor, and then, with the aid of Mr. Philbrook, put the girl in a car and rushed to the hospital, but the girl was dead when they arrived.

She has been shot but done, but that shot pierced the heart.

PETERBOROUGH AUTO ASSOCIATION OUTING

Yesterday afternoon at 2.30 a long line of automobiles gathered in front f Victoria Park. The Peterborough Auto Association had invited the County Council, now in session the County pathmasters and other County officials to drive out to South Beach Hotel, at Clear Lake. Unfortunately the livelong rain of yesterday somewhat interfered with proposed arrangements. However, some 80 members of the Association and their guests took in the drive, and passing through Lakefield without stopping, arrived at South Beach Hotel ay 3.30. Here Mine Host Brooks, with his proverbial hospitality made the visitors welcome. In the evening, Mr. Brooks served a most appetizing dinner, that was thoroughly enjoyed. President Travers occupied the chair and was a host in himself. Dr. Amys, chairman of the entertainment committee, made a short but clever address. Warden Garbutt followed in a most encouraging speech, referring to the need of co-operation to secure and maintain good roads. Mr. E. A. Peck, M.L.A., spoke on the government road appropriation. Mr. Robt. Shaw, of Toronto, chairman of the Roads and Bridges Committee, gave a splendid and interesting address. The party returned to the city at 9 ojclock.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM VERY SEVERELY CRITICIZED, TORONTO

Scatching Denunciation by Rev. A. J. Vining at Baptists Meeting

Toronto, June 19.—Roman Catholicism came in for some scathing criticism this morning at the meeting of the Toronto Association of Baptist Churches, when Rev. A. J. Vining, pastor of the College street church, during his address on "The Church Relation to the Denominational Interests," declared that it was the duty of the Toronto Baptists to support their missions in Bolivar and not to leave the work to the Roman Catholic Church. The work of the Roman Catholic Church in South America has been a dismal failure, although it has gone on for two centuries or more," said Mr. Vining, "and if we leave the task of Christianizing that continent to the Roman Catholics, Satan may pack up and quit South America altogether and allow them to bring his work to a successful conclusion."

Against Union.

Mr. Vining went on to point out that the Roman Catholics were making determined efforts to win the entire American continent, and he urged the Baptists to fight against the possible consummation of this plan for all they could. "The Popish Church is slowing forging chains to bind this country back to medevialism again," he declared. "It is their boast that they will subjugate and subdue the whole American continent. Up, Baptists and fight!"

Opposition to Church Union was voiced by Mr. Vining, who asserted warmly that he felt that the Baptist Communion had a distinctive message to give to the world and that until it was delivered he was opposed to the hauling down of the Baptist flag.

DOMINION CASES COST THOUSANDS.

Ottawa, June 19.—No less than $200,000 was paid out by the Department of Justice this year for outside counsel to argue Dominion cases before the Supreme Court and Privy Council. The department is adding to its staff two legal representatives at salaries of $5,000 each, which it is believed will result in a large saving.

MODERATE UNIONISTS MAY NOT SUPPORT CENSURE MOTION

Opposition Can Expect to Make No More Capital Out of Marconi Affair--Changed Tone of Conservative Press --Some Unionists May Not Answer Division Bell

London, June 19.—It is already clear that the opposition can expect no more kudos from the Marconi affair. The Liberals are exultant at the change in the situation effected by the debate. The speeches of the accused Ministers, who were necessarily silent while every idle tongue was wagging, proved more effective as a reminder that there is another side to the case than ever their friends had hoped. The changed tone of the Conservative press makes this evident more than that of the Liberal organs.

The less responsible sheets make much play with "the apology," and omit to point the probably unnecessary moral that an apology is not the unusual penalty for Ministers who are "found with their hands in the till." The soldier newspapers somewhat belatedly give great prominence to the complete collapse of the gross charges and admit that the bottom has fallen out of the vote of censure. The Daily Mail goes so far as to express surprise that the Unionist motion was not withdrawn last night. The same journal uses considerable emphasis to make it clear that the scandalous charges were always confined to one or two obscure organs.

ELUDES POLICE NINE BUT FINALLY CAPTURED

Vicksburg, Miss., June 19. — Aften having eluded the police for almost nine years, Sam Campbell, who escaped from the Lousiana penitentiary in 1904, was captured here today. The police, who had been tipped off, found him hiding in a loft. He is held for the Louisiana authorities.

Campbell was sent to prison in 1901 from New Orleans for murder and burglary.

THE EDUCATION OF THE MOVING PICTURE

Few Canadians realize or appreciate their responsibilities of citizenship in the publicity and furthering the advancement of the natural resources of this great country through the medium of the moving picture. Publicity agents tour Europe to impress the people with the glorious opportunities before the immigrant, so that Europeans often know and appreciate Canada better than Canadian born citizens.

The great majority of moving pictures are made in the United States and Europe on staged settings, while grand and wonderful scenes of Canadian life are neglected in Canada.

Arctic pictures depicting the life and habits of the Esquimo and scenes of hunting, prospecting and trading in our most northerly possessions in the Arctic Circle, actually taken from life, are showing at the Princess Theater, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Here is a splendid field for National education and the medium is right at hand.

SLAYER OF WOMEN REGAINS HIS REASON

Jackson, Miss., June 19.—Emmet Yeagley, the young white man who assassinated his girl wife and mother-in-law in this city about two years ago, has been restored to normal reason, according to a letter written by Dr. W. W. Smithson, superintendent of the Mississippi Insane Hospital, to Judge W. A. Henry. The letter was received today.

Dr. Smithson stated that Yeagley is now perfectly rational and offers to return him to answer the indictment pending in the Hinds county circuit court.

It is probable that the pending indictment will be dismissed on the ground that Yeagley was mentally irresponsible at the time the killing was committed

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store—we make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

HE TOOK A CHANCE

BY C. V. CLARENDON.

On the night before the operation Doctor Klein entered his patient's room and sat by his bed. "You are resolved to take the chance of it?" he asked.

His steel-gray eyes were fixed unwaveringly upon those of the cripple beneath the sheets. The cripple smiled back at him as frankly.

"Perfectly," he murmured. "My chance is, I understand, on the whole favorable. You say I am the fourth who has risked this?"

"The fifth," answered the great surgeon composedly.

"And two of them died?"

"O, dear, no. Well, yes, two died, but one of these would have died anyway from other causes. In his case death was a merciful release. I am firmly convinced that you will get up as straight as I am."

And he went on learnedly to describe the details of his famous operation which was to cure the hunchback. The pressure of the vertebrae upon the spinal cord must be removed, the distorted bones reset and held in a cast; it was perfectly feasible, but because the slightest slip of the scalpel would mean paralysis and a lingering death no other surgeon dared attempt it.

"And I suppose," the surgeon ended, smiling kindly, "that there is, as usual, a woman in the case."

The hunchback's eyes lit up.

"I'll tell you, Doctor Klein," he said, "for you have been my best friend in the world. Yes—there is a woman in the case.

"I haven't burdened you with my early history, but I may as well say that I am a man of good family and in my youth enjoyed the advantages of an excellent education. My early life was, as you may imagine, a torture of self-consciousness and suffering. The pity, the aversion, the disgust of all whom I met—well, you can understand how these things affect a sensitive boy. I felt cut off from the world by the barrier which my deformity had raised up. Once, when I was about twenty-one, I fell in love. One day I dared to tell her. I shall never forget the astonished look in her eyes. 'Why, Mr. Manning,' she said, 'I never dreamed that you felt like this. I thought that we were only friends.' Then she went on, with a touch of anger, 'I thought that I could safely be friends with you where I could not with another man.' She stopped. 'Because of my deformity,' I answered bitterly. She made no answer but went out of the room.

"But when I met Esther Garvin things were different. She made me forget my infirmity. Ours was a real communion of souls; I knew then that I had met a woman who would marry me in spite of all, in spite of everything, whose love was to be as eternal as my own. And because of this I left her, three years ago, after a mad demonstration of love which left each of us panic-stricken and ashamed. I, because I knew that I had been a cur to tell her; she, because she knew this feeling in my heart. I left her and never saw her again.

"For two years I tried to put her out of my heart, but in vain. Then I heard of your operation. I scraped together every penny I could, and, when it reached eight hundred dollars I came to you—and you know the rest. But you refused to take a penny of it and so I can only repay you with my deepest gratitude. And when I am well I shall tell Esther, and she will bless your name a hundredfold."

The surgeon rose from the bedside. His face was white, his steady hand trembling. Without a word he pressed the hunchback's fingers and left the room.

"Ask Miss Garvin to step into my office," he said to the orderly, and, five minutes afterward, the anaesthetist entered.

"Miss Garvin," said Doctor Klein, "I want you to take a holiday tomorrow and let Miss Chapin etherize my patients."

"Why?" asked Esther Garvin quietly and directly.

Doctor Klein half rose from his chair and sat down dizzily.

"Esther," he said, placing his hand upon her sleeve, "are you still quite sure that you can never love me? Yes, I see that you are. You gave me to understand once that your heart was pledged. I want you to tell me one thing, and I do not ask it impertinently. Where is the man you love?"

"I don't know," she answered.

"He has gone out of your life?"

"But I love him still," she cried defiantly. "I love him and always shall. O, Doctor Klein, I—we all owe so much to you. None of us but is too conscious of your many kindnesses, your goodness, your charity and self sacrifice. Don't make it harder for me. I don't love you, I can't love you." Suddenly she flung herself upon her knees. "Do you know why I was first attracted to you?" she cried. "The man I love is a hunchback. His whole life has been poisoned by his infirmity. I hoped it would be my task to bring him back to an understanding of goodness, to instill a gracious benevolence into his mind and nature. But he left me because he dared not ask me to link my life with his. Then I came here, to be a nurse, to give my life to others. I met you, I learned of your operation and hoped that some day the time would arrive when he, too, would hear of you and would come to you to be made a straight man like other men, and then—"

The Surgeon Rose From the Bedside.

"I loved you," said Doctor Klein hoarsely.

"You loved me," she repeated mechanically. "And then I dared not tell you about what lay so near my heart. But I have told you now because—because—"

She did not know. Perhaps it was her lover's presence in the hospital that she felt unconsciously; she looked helplessly at the doctor. He raised her to her feet gently.

"Miss Garvin," he said slowly, "five minutes ago I contemplated the blackest crime that any doctor could imagine or dream of. You have straightened out the mental kink in my own brain as I shall straighten Mr. Manning's body tomorrow."

"Mr. Manning!" she cried, and stood staring at him in terror. "You know, then? He is—"

"My dear," the doctor answered, "he has told me everything. He loves you. And he is under this roof tonight. But you must not go to him now. You shall see him tomorrow and you and I will cure him."

And Manning saw Esther's face smiling on him as he sank to sleep under the ether; and Esther's was the first that he saw when he awakened in his room afterward. But Doctor Klein was standing at her side.

"You will be well soon," said Doctor Klein. "You will be straight as a man should be and I—I wish you—"

But he knew that his life also stretched straight before him, ruled and planned and unchangeable.

ESKIMO NEW WOMAN

The Reindeer Queen of Alaska a Capitalist and Philanthropist

When a woman in an enlightened country makes her way to a front rank in the industrial world the fact soon becomes known and people are eager to learn something of the conditions that brought it about and of the character of the one who accomplished it. That a woman with a brown skin should also successfully compete with the men of her race is less generally understood. Out of the 260 Eskimos who own reindeer in Alaska two are women. One of these—Mary Arlsarlook Andrewnk—has received the title of "Reindeer Queen of Alaska."

"Queen Mary" owns a herd of 1,303 deer, which she manages with judgment and intelligence. According to the usual contract made with the Government, she is required to train three apprentices and to give each the customary number of reindeer. She has done better than this. She has trained and rewarded eight or ten apprentices. She long since discarded the igloo, or native hut, half-underground, in which she was born, and is now comfortably housed near Nome in a cabin of logs. She speaks seven or eight Indian languages, and this has enabled her to be of considerable service as an interpreter.

"Queen Mary" has brought up a number of helpless children, and, having none of her own, has not only cared for them physically, but has also given them a place in her heart. Surely, according to her light, "she hath done her part."

Wants to Fight a Lion

"I want to fight a lion or a tiger unarmed, single-handed. Without any arms whatever. No big game hunter in the world can give an expert opinion about it, because he cannot possibly have the slightest idea of my style of fighting. I want no money for my feat, only the film with the reproduction of the encounter. The film shall remain the property of the man who finds the money if I cannot defeat my opponent, but I have not the slightest doubt about my complete success in the end."

This is part of a letter which reached a Paris newspaper from a correspondent who sent his name and address, and sought financial backing for his scheme. In a second letter the man said if he did not meet with the assistance he looked for he would fight a bull in an arena in Spain, Mexico or South Aemrica.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Sir George Ross may be an Imperialist, but he has a knack of hiding it successfully.

The moribund Senate has thrown into the arena of practical politics a real live issue—that of Senate Reform.

The Toronto Star and the Ottawa Free Press like to have the Senate kill the Navy Bill, but want the Senate abolished, nevertheless. That body lost many friends, and won none, by its arrogant behavior.

Mr. Emmerson will now have an opportunity of explaining to the loyal people of Westmoreland why he found it necessary to preach revolution on the floor of the House of Commons and to read the Declaration of Independence.

After graduation, a girl pictures to her chum the kind of man she is going to marry, and invariably he is a very handsome and heroic looking fellow. But it is not long before the chum discovers that she has picked a gangle-legged husband who is so ugly that the dogs bark at him.

ANARCHY IN TURKEY.

The defeat of Turkey was so complete that anarchy looms large in the disposition of political factions to make matters worse. This is shown by the assassination of Schefket Pasha, the grand vizier, and one of the foremost men of the Turkish empire. His murder is attributed to the faction that has opposed the young Turks, who in turn were accused of the assassination of Nezim Pasha a few months ago.

For a nation that is down and out, like Turkey, it is almost incredible that internal strike should lead to the slaying of the only men strong enough to deal with a critical situation. Schefket Pasha was regarded as the ablest man in Turkey, and his death will lessen the opportunity of the country to recover from its plight. To kill such a man at such a time is merely to complete the work the Balkan allies left unfinished.

As a result of the war Turkey has lost two of her greatest men, and both of them died in Constantinople from bullets fired by Turks. This will make it harder for the government to recover from the disaster it has suffered in the Balkan war.

That Terrible Fatigue Can be Overcome

A Simple Home Remedy Now Cures Lack of Energy, Loss of Ambition, and a Feeling of "Don't Care."

Successful in Nearly Every Case.

That miserable nervousness and half-sick tired-all-the-time condition is due nine cases in ten to a clogged-up system. You grow irritable and despondent, you lack ambition, energy seems all gone. Surest road to health is by the frequent use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they will make you feel like new all over in a short time.

Writing from his home in Barcelona, Mr. Frederick G. Mayer states: "I think no one ever suffered as severely as I did for nearly six months So many serious symptoms were developing as a consequence of this evil condition of my system that I realized I must find a remedy. The strong pills of various kinds I tried seemed after their first effects were over to make me far worse and I did not know which way to turn for relief. I saw Dr. Hamilton's Pills advertised, and the first box used satisfied me. I found a true remedy. Instead of griping with undue activity, Dr. Hamilton's Pills acted as naturally as if physic had not been taken. I never had to increase the dose, and, indeed, within a month I reduced it, and when the system finally acted of its own accord as a result of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, I took a dose twice a week only, just to make sure the old condition would not come back."

No other remedy cures constipation and billiousness so easily or safely as Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they are an ideal family remedy for all disease of the stomach liver and bowles. Sold in 25c. boxes, five for $1.00, all druggists and storekeepers or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

WHY CALIFORNIA OPPOSES THE JAPANESE

Why was it that the California Legislature voted for the anti-alien land bill by a vote of seventy-two to three in the Assembly, and thirty-five to two in the Senate? There must be something behind this tremendous majority, and P. C. Macfarlane in Collier's, tries to tell us what it is. He declares that it is a distinctly race issue, the white man against the brown man, and California voted for the white. A typical illustration of the present situation if sound in the town of Florin, eight miles south-east of Sacramento. "Florin is the centre of a beautiful little vine and berry growing district comprising about twenty-four sections of land. A dozen years ago each of its vineyards and berry farms surrounded and sustained an American home. Now it is estimated that sixty-five per cent of these farms are owned and operated by Japanese. Formerly there were about 1,500 whites and no Japanese in this community. To-day it is estimated that there are 500 whites, and from 1,500 to 2,500 Japanese, according to the demands of the season. There were three large general merchandise stores in the town, owned by whites. To-day two of those stores are held by the Japanese, and the lone white man has computed the hour of his own demise. He says that within five years the Nipponese will put him out of business. There were only two white hotels in th? place; now there is only a Japanese boarding house. There were two white blacksmith shops; now one of them is Japanese. The barber shop, the shoe shop, the fish market, and the meat market, are owned and operated by the Japanese."

There is no question about the efficiency of the Japanese, and until he gets a footing he is prepared to work for small wages, but when once firmly established there is little complaint of our brown brother selling his labor too cheap. But the question arises and must be faced, "Is it well for a state to have such colonies here and there which do not attempt to assimilate with the rest of the state, and which retain their allegiance to another land?" We confess that we can anticipate no other answer from most states but an emphatic "No," and Japan herself, in response to such a question in regard to her own territory, would give the same answer.

PUBLIC OPINION.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH AND THE STATE.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—A few weeks ago there appeared in the daily papers an article copied from the "Marian," a Roman Catholic paper, stating that 'if, by an impossible supposition, the Pope should man, army and fleet to storm our coast, do you know what Catholics here would do? You would have two million Catholics in the American army ready to die to resist the Pope's invasion; you would have thirteen million Catholics in their homes praying for their sons, brothers and fathers in the field; you would have forty-five thousand Catholic nuns upon their knees before the tabernacle beseeching the God of armies to strike the guns from the Roman emissaries. You would have seventeen thousand priests in the front ranks of the army fighting till they died for the Constitution of the United States."

Here is what Bishop Phelan, of St. Louis said, as published in the Western Watchman, and which speaks for itself:

"Tell us, in the conflict between the church and the civil government, we take the side of the church; of course we do. Why, if the Government of the United States were at war with the church we would say to-morrow, to hell with the Government of the United States, and if the church and all the Governments of the world were at war we would say, to hell with all the Governments of the world."

Which of these, the editor or the bishop, more correctly interprets the spirit of the hierarchy?

MAKE ME, O LORD, A MAN

By F. A. Conners.

Lord, make of me in word and deed,
  A man to honor thee;
A man of justice, faith and truth,
  A man of equity;
Give me the grace I daily need
  To serve Thy purpose true;
That I may do each day I live
  The things I ought to do.

Help me to do Thy sovereign will,
  As in Thy Word revealed;
That sinners lost be led to Thee,
  And broken hearts be healed.
So shall my mission be fulfilled,
  In life's alloted span;
Then shall I serve Thy purpose true
  And truly be a man.

It is not in the name I take,
  Nor what I claim to be,
Norwhat the people say I am,
  Nor what they think of me,
Nor where I live, nor what I do,
  Nor whether bound or free;
But it is what I really am,
  O Lord, my God, in Thee,
    O Lord, my God, in Thee.

1000 MEN WANT LONG HIKE WITH N. Y. GIRL

Miss Gladys Mason, Seeking One Man As Guard, Overwhelmed With Applicants

New York, June 19.—Miss Gladys Mason, vegetarian and pedestrian, is embarrassed. She asked for one man, and got 1000. And still they're coming.

Miss Mason is the New York girl who announced recently that she was going to take a little stroll from her home, at 214 W. 65th street, to San Francisco. Also that she wanted to hire a guard and manager—an athletic young man who liked walking and didn't mind a jaunt like that. And she complained that she hadn't been able to find one.

It pays to advertise. As soon as Miss Mason's complaint broke into print, applications for the job began to pour in at the rate of 100 or more a day.

MAY LEAVE NEW YORK EARLIER

She soon found a man to suit her, and after a few more hundred applications by letter, by telephone, by telegram and in person, she began to feel annoyed. She says now she may leave New York earlier than she expected, just to avoid the rush.

It's going to be a strictly vegetarian trip. Miss Mason won't eat meat or drink coffee or tea, and will do her daily 25 or 30 miles on two meals.

"People eat too much," she says.

TRIP OF MISSIONARY WORK.

Her trip is largely in the nature of missionary work. She wants to show what can be done by a woman who doesn't use up all of her energy just digesting food. She eats fruits, vegetables and nuts, but doesn't believe in raw food except for people who live a very primitive life.

Miss Mason will be accompanied by a maid, as well as her manager. But she won't insist on the maid walking all the way.

She is distressed by many of the letters from men who want the job of managing her and her trip.

"I would like to hire them all,"

The Annandale Country Club, of Pasadena, Cal., was second with 34. The Glen Echo Country Club, of St. Louis, was third with 46, and the Memphis County Club was fourth with 47. More than forty clubs competed.

RING.

Ad Wolgast has injured his thumb and will be out of the boxing game for six months. Ad is going to Hawaii, say coast dispatches, but strange to relate, no mention is made of Cherokee Tommy.

Edgreen, the world renowned authority on ring matters, says:

"All up and down the Pacific coast several hundred miles of it, they are talking about the ring exploits of a young middleweight who seems likely to step into the shoes left vacant by the late lamented Stanley Ketchel.

"Bob" McAllister is his name. Fight fans say that he is the most likely middleweight developed since the days of Bob Fitzsimmons. Some think he will be even a better man than Ketchel, for, added to the fighting fire of the sensational middleweight king of three years ago, he has shifty cleverness and generalship that is remarkable, in a boxer with so short a professional record. Jim Corbett, who should know a fighter when she sees one, saw McAllister work out at the Olympic A.C. in San Francisco. And Corbett was so much impressed that he said the youngster can whip all the heavyweights.

McAllister is a classy youngster. Like Jimmy Britt, he was a member of the Olympic A.C., which boasts that only two professional fighters, Britt and John Herget (Young Mitchell) have ever been carried on its membership list. While exercising in the Olympic gymnasium Bob took up boxing. Soon he became so clever with the gloves that he was induced to enter in the club's boxing tournaments, and then to compete in the amateur championships. First he won the welterweight title (Pacific Coast champion), then growing a little heavier, won the middleweight class as well, and won the heavyweight championship.

CINDER PATH.

Ithaca, N.Y., June 19.—John Paul Jones, Cornell's great runner, is the hero of the undergraduate body at Cornell, and although he modestly seeks to escape the tributes of his college mates he has been lionized on all sides for his wonderful running in the stadium last Saturday.

"I never saw any runner finish with such strength; he came down like a bull," said Moakley.

"I feel sure that Jones can break any record from the half mile to ten miles if he should train for the distance. I have no doubt but that last Saturday, had he saved himself for the event, he would have broken the half-mile record, not only intercollegiate but amateur.

"I have timed him on the three mile course at Cornell, and he has run that course forty seconds faster than any of the other great Cornell distance men have ever run it. He has lowered the cross-country mark every time he has run. I have never seen such a stride, such strength, such sprint. He has run 440 yards more than once in 49 seconds.

FUGITIVE NEGRO BURNED TO DEATH

Dies in Flames Rather Than Surrender to Posse After Wounding White Man

Jackson, Miss., June 19.—Ben Jones, a negro, allowed himself to be burned to death near Greenwood rather than surrender to a posse.

Jones quarreled over an account with Charles Turnipseed, a bookkeeper at the Highlandale plantation commissary. Finally he seized a gun and shot the bookkeeper through the left leg. He then ran.

A hastily organized posse got on his track at once and traced him to a cabin. Jones had barricated himself and would not come out when the officers demanded that he surrender. They set fire to the cabin thinking that the flames would force the negro out and allow them to capture him. Jones preferred death in the fire to capture. When the cabin had burned, his body was found in the ruins.

Youth Would Rather Have Her Than Get Coin and Enlist in United States Navy

Sioux City, Ia., June 19.—An offer of $10,000 if he would give up the girl he loved and enlist in the United States navy apparently has been turned down by Charles Jason, son of a wealthy rancher near Niobrora, Neb.

Two weeks ago the elder Jason left a check for $10,000 at the recruiting station here to be turned over to his son the moment he enlisted in the navy. The son said he would think it over, but he has failed to return, and recruiting officers do not believe he will claim the prize. He is believed to have gone to St. Paul, where his sweetheart lives.

ROBS $60,000 IN CASH MONEY

Blackmailer Wreck Happy Home of Young Californian, His Wife and Little Girl

Pasadena, Cal., June 19.—There is a luxurious little bungalow in this city that Wm. St. John Ranney built for his wife and little daughter, Helen.

It's been the scene of many gay parties, dinner, bright days and merry evenings. Now the shades are drawn, the doors barred and the rooms that once held so much gaiety are unhospitable and dark.

The wife still lives there, and the little daughter, but the father is gone. Sensing the oppression, and not knowing what it all means, the little girl asks: "Where's papa?" The mother stops her with a gesture. "Hush, never mind," but her thoughts wander to grim San Quentin penitentiary, where the man must spend the next seven years of his life.

EMBEZZLED $60,000 TO SATISFY BLACKMAILERS

Wm. St. John Ranney embezzled from his employers, the great Santa Fe railroad—embezzled $60,000 to use as "hush money" to keep a gang of blackmailers from exposing his past life, thereby wrecking him socially and financially, and bringing pain to his wife and child.

When a young man, Ranney erred and went to jail—and the threat iof exposure has been hanging over his head, like the sword of Damocles, for years.

"Yes," said Mrs. Ranney, while a lone beam of sunshine from a crack between shade and windowframe fell like a spotlight on her pale face, "before we were married I knew about that term my husband served in Elmira. But that didn't make any difference. I loved him. I still love him

DIDN'T TELL WIFE OF DEMANDS FOR "HUSH MONEY."

"He didn't tell me about the blackmailers. If he had—everything would have been different. Like the brave man he is, he kept that to himself, and never even moaned when that terrible worry must have been burning him up inside.

"When he was arrested he told me to stay away from the jail, but the poor fellow had been hit a hard blow, and he couldn't stand it any longer alone. They found him crying in the corridor, and then they sent for me to comfort him. But after they take him away to San Quentin I won't be able to do that.

"Our friends? Oh, you know society friends. We had a lot of them at one time. I've still got one real friend — my mother. So we're just waiting for the sentence, and after that's over, we can plan for the future. I must do something while I'm waiting for my husband."

LITTLE GIRL ASKS ALWAYS FOR FATHER—CAN'T UNSTAND.

The little girl ran in from the hall and snuggled up against her mother's knee, so the conversation ceased. Her lips framed the old question, "Where's papa?"

And the mother shook her head.

So it must be, all through the years the man spends toiling in stipes. Her father's memory will grow dim in the little girl's mind, but sometimes she must remember and ask: "Where's papa?"

And always the answer will be the same.

"Hush. Never mind."

$206,875 PAID FOR A ROMNEY.

Portrait of Lady Anne De La Pole Bought by Duveen at Christie's.

London, June 19.—Romney's portrait of Lady Anne de la Pole was purchased yesterday for $206,875 by Duveen at Christie's auction room.

George Romney (1734-1802) was second of a family of 11. His father was a carpenter and cabinet maker at Dalton-in-Furness. George worked for 10 years at his father's trade. In 1755 he was articled to a "Count" Steele, who taught him "the art of science of a painter." In 1762 he went to London. He gradually rose to great renown. Lord Thurlow said: "Reynolds and Romney divide the town. I am of the Romney faction." His most celebrated sitter was Lady Hamilton, whom he painted 24 times. The end of his life is referred to by Edward Fitzgerald as follows:

"How touching is the close of Romney's life. He was married at 21, and because Sir Joshua and others had said that marriage spoilt an artist almost immediately left his wife in the north and saw her but twice till the end of his life. when old, nearly mad and quite desolate, he went back to her and she received him and nursed him till he died. This quiet act of hers is worth all Romney's pictures."

HOW TO LIVE LONG

Frederic Harrison's Golden Rules—People Eat Too Much

Five golden rules of health were given recently by Mr. Frederic Harrison, author, critic, bibliophile, ex-professor, barrister, historian, traveller, and amateur gardener, on his eighty-first birthday, celebrated at his home at Hawkhurst, Kent:

(1) Abstain from tobacco, spirits, made dishes, and all such dreadful things. I am satisfied with a little bit of mutton and rice pudding.

(2) Rise from a meal with an appetite. I believe people eat too much.

(3) Walk every day for two hours. This I am going to do as soon as I get through a pile of letters and telegrams from Florence and Rome. I am too old to play at tennis, and golf is too slow.

(4) Sleep eight hours. People cannot sleep who smoke themselves black in the face, eat too much, and have not walked enough.

(5) More important than all—be content with what you have got. Take things quietly.

COMB INSIDE BRUSH

Slides Into Cavity That Runs Along Back of Latter

A truly pocket comb and brush designed by a North Carolina man. In the back on the hair brush is a narrow longitudinal cavity just big enough to receive a comb that runs the length of it. A hinged clip at the opening of this cavity keeps the comb from falling out when it is not in use. The handle of the comb is also removable, unscrewing at will, so that it will readily be seen that the article is a convenient one for traveling and can even be carried in the pocket without discomfort. In these sanitary days, when states are passing laws against the use of public drinking cups and other similar articles, it is surely time to consider the public brush and comb, which must form a home for many of the germs that are responsible for skin diseases. Pocket toilet articles should be welcomed.

FOX RANCHING

Industry Not Lucrative, But Animals Bred to Perfection

Breeding and rearing foxes for their fur is an industry still carried on in Alaska. It was also tried a few years ago on the Maine coast, but with little success. An island was selected for the purpose two or three miles from the shore, far enough away so that the foxes could not escape by swimming to the shore. But in a cold winter the water froze, and the ice made a bridge from the island to the main land. It is said by Agnes Herbert, in her book, "Two Dianas in Alaska," that the foxes travelled over this, and that they did not stop when they had reached the farther edge.

In Alaska the ranchers have not this risk of ice. On the North Semidi the first fox ranch was established with the idea of making a great industry of raising blue foxes to supply the fur markets of the world. Nobody has made a fortune out of it, but the foxes can be reared to great perfection. The animals are killed between November and January.

The blue fox living wild is now exceedingly rare in Alaska, but the islands set apart for the raising of them in domesticity are numerous. The only thing requisite is that the island be two miles distant from any other land. This is to guard against the foxes swimming away.

Some of the islands have as many as 1,000 head. The food provided is meal and fish, mixed together, and given once a day. The beautiful creatures get to know the hand that feeds them, not dreaming that some day it will turn and rend them. It takes about nine months for the cubs to grow to maturity, and the litters usually number from six to eight.

One or two islands go in for propagating the silver-grey fox, whose pelt is worth much more than that of the blue.

Isles of the Blest

Between the island of Madagascar and the coast of India there are 16,000 islands, only 600 of which are inhabited. In most of these islands a man can live and support his family in luxury without working more than twenty-five days in the year, or at all, as nature provides the food and no clothes are required.

Holland's Waterways

Holland has 2,000 miles of canals in addition to 3,000 miles of other navigable waterways.

New Motorcycle

One of the newer motorcycles has a single seat which will carry two riders side by side.

Insurance Act Cases

Lord Mowbray, Segrave and Stourton, of Allerton Park, near Knaresborough, Yorks, was summoned at Knaresborough Police Court for failure to pay contributions as required under the insurance act. There were six separate cases. Evidence was given to show that the men, chiefly employed as bricklayers on Lord Mowbray's estate had not had any of their insurance cards stamped.

Mr. Sanders, who represented Lord Mowbray, said his Lordship objected

ANTIQUITY OF HYMNS

While hymns as we know them today are a comparatively recent innovation in church services, they are a very ancient institution, and existed long before the Christian era. Many important collections of hymns date back to about five hundred years before Christ, though, of course, hymns existed long before that period. Among the collections which have come down to us from then are the Sanskrit "Rig-Veda," a Chinese "Book of Odes," the "Buddhist Hymns," the Grecian "Homeric Hymns," and the "Odes of Pindar." "The Latin Hymns," or hymns of the western church, date from the fourth to the twentieth centuries, while the "Lutheran Chorales" date from the sixteenth century. The hymns which play so prominent a part in the services of the modern Protestant churches were not in wide general use until about 1860.

THE USEFUL WINDMILL

History of the Machine Goes Back For Centuries—New Ideas Evolved

The farm windmill, used in the widest sense, means a machine by which the nergy of the wind is applied to useful purposes. Windmills were certainly in use as early as the twelfth century, but their exact origin is lost in the oblivion of the past. Their introduction into Europe is generally ascribed to the Saracens, through the Crusaders. Flashing their crimson-crossed banners homeward, through Europe, the knights of Richard Cœur de Lion brought many strange customs and innovations with them. The earliest written record of windmills in England, dated the twelfth century, deals with certain disputes in reference to tithes connected with "windmills." Since those far-away times windmills have been in constant use in Europe, America and other continents. But modern science has provided us with more efficient and reliable means of grinding corn or driving engines than the somewhat intermittent power of the wind.

In Holland they are still largely employed. No picture of the quaint Dutch country—whether actual or imaginary—would be complete without its windmill. The sturdy mills with their revolving vanes, form as great a part of Dutch character as the golden pins and dainty lace caps of the women, the baggy trousers and wooden clogs of the men. Windmills are somewhat extensively used in this country for pumping and driving agricultural machinery. It has been discovered that windmoved machines were useful where fuel is scarce and labor can proceed leisurely. A windmill is never a powerful or efficient motor, and its work is variable. But in favorable positions a windmill will run, on an average, eight hours out of 24.

Since crusading days there have been many radical changes in the make and shape of windmills. The oldest type was called the post mill, the whole structure being carried on a post. In order to bring the sails facing the wind the structure was turned on its base by a long lever. The post mill was succeeded by the tower, smock or frock mill, in which the mill proper was a stationary tower, the sails bein gattached to a revolving cap, rotating on the top of the tower. In all old types of mill the twin shaft carried four or six arms or whips, on which long, rectangular sails were stretched, a rectangular leading sail being sometimes added. Later the sails were made of sail cloth spread on a wooden framework, and at times boards were utilized. The modern windmills are gigantic, carrying 18 or more sails, fixed round a large disc. They consist of narrow boards or slats, arranged radially, each board moving with the wind's impetus. Nowadays these windmills are fitted with automatic feathering and steering machinery, and are largely used for pumping water.

It is interesting to consider that at the beginning of the nineteenth century the whole of England's grinding, sawing, stamping and the draining of the eastern counties was performed by wind power. At the beginning of the twentieth century science has rendered the windmill a veritable thing of the past. As far as such work is concerned, they stand idle, the revolution of their giant sails no longer a thing of use and necessity.

HONORED CAPTAIN COOK

Welland School Children Pay Unique Tribute to Memory of Explorer

The scholars of Welland Public School subscribed towards the purchase of a Canadian ensign, which was sent to the scholars of the public school at Marton, Yorkshire, England, known to history as the birthplace of Captain James Cook, the famous navigator and discoverer.

Last year the school children of Sydney, New South Wales, sent to Marton School a handsome ensign of the Australian commonwealth in honor of the great seaman whose discoveries and voyages in the Pacific did so much to extend and maintain the world-encircling British Empire.

The letter accompanying the flag, signed by the Welland Public School children, says:—"The Canadian flag is presented to Marton School by the pupils of the public school, Welland, Ontario, Canada, as a token of their interest in the birthplace of Captain James Cook, the famous navigator. It is also a tribute to the memory of Captain Cook, who, as an officer in the naval expedition accompanying General Wolfe played a distinguished part in winning Canada for Britain. The flag is also one of the symbols of the Empire whose world-wide extent is in so large a measure due to the skill, enterprise and discoveries of the great sailor."

Marton School is provided with two flagstaffs, and when the Canadian and Australian ensigns are hoisted they will be tangible evidence of the reality of Empire and of the honor due to the great seaman who gave his life as an Empire-builder.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. "The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—[illegible] while the prisoner is sent for, [illegible] comes from General Varney for [illegible] to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

"Harry!" he whispered. "My God, you have shot yourself!"

But Henry Dumont was past speaking. He simply smiled at his brother, and closed his eyes. The next instant the room was filled with light and sound. From every window and door people poured in; the soldiers from the porches, from the hall, Mrs. Varney, Arrelsford and Edith; from the other side of the hall a hubbub of screams and cries rose from behind the locked door where the sewing women sat. Martha brought up the rear with lights, which Arrelsford took from her and set on the table. The room was again brightly illuminated.

As they crowded through the various entrances, their eyes fell upon Thorne, who was leaning nonchalantly against the table, his revolver in his hand, a look of absolute indifference upon his face. His acting was superb had they but known it. He could not betray himself now and make vain his brother's sublime act of self-sacrifice for the cause. There was a tumult of shouts and sudden cries:

"Where is he? What has he done? This way now!"

Most of those who entered had eyes only for the man lying upon the floor, blood welling darkly through his gray shirt exposed by the opening of his coat which had been torn apart in the struggle. Three people had eyes only for Thorne, the man who hated him, the girl who loved him, and the woman who suspected him. Between the soldiers and these three stood the corporal of the guard, representing as it were, the impartial law.

Thorne did not glance once at the girl who loved him, or at the man who hated him, or at the woman who suspected him. He fixed his eyes upon the corporal of the guard.

"There's your prisoner, corporal," he said calmly, without a break in his voice, although such anguish possessed him as he had never before experienced and lived through, but his control was absolutely perfect.

And his quiet words and quiet demeanor increased the hate of one man, and the suspicions of one woman, and the love and admiration of the other.

"There's your prisoner," he said, slipping his revolver slowly back into its holster. "We had a bit of a struggle and I had to shoot him. Look out for him."

CHAPTER X.

Caroline Mitford Writes a Dispatch.

The war department telegraph office had once been a handsome apartment, one of those old-fashioned, heavily corniced, marble-manteled, low-windowed, double-doored rooms in a public building. It was now in a state of extreme dilapidation, the neglected and forlorn condition somehow being significant of the moribund Confederacy in which practically everything was either dead or dying but the men and women.

"Look Out, Harry! You'll Hurt Yourself."

A large double door in one corner gave entrance to a corridor. The doors were of handsome mahogany, but they had been kicked and battered until varnish and polish had both disappeared and they looked as dilapidated as the cob-webbed corners and the broken moldings. On the other side of the room, three long French windows gave entrance to a shallow balcony of cast iron fantastically molded, which hung against the outer wall. Beyond this the observer peering through the dusty panes could discern the large white pillars of the huge porch which overhung the front of the building. Further away beyond the shadow of the porch were visible the lights of the sleeping town, seen dimly in the bright moonlight.

The handsome furniture which the room had probably once contained, had been long since displaced by the rude telegraph equipment and the heavy plaster cornices and moldings were sadly marred by telegraph wires which ran down the walls to the tables, rough pine affairs, which carried the instruments. There were two of these tables, each with a telegraph key at either end. One of them stood near the center of the room, and the other up against the fine old marble mantel, chipped, battered, ruined like the rest of the room. For the rest, the apartment contained a desk, shelves with the batteries on them, and half a dozen chairs of the commonest and cheapest variety. The floor was bare, dusty, and tobacco stained. The sole remnant of the ancient glory of the room was a large handsome old clock on the wall above the mantel, the hands of which pointed to the hour of ten.

But if the room itself was in a dingy and even dirty condition, the occupants were very much alive. One young man, Lieutenant Allison, sat at the table under the clock, and another, Lieutenant Foray, at the table in the center of the room. Both were busy sending or receiving messages. The instruments kept up a continuous clicking, heard distinctly above the buzz of conversation which came from half a dozen youngsters, scarcely more than boys, grouped together at the opposite side of the room, waiting to take to the various offices of the department, or to the several officials of the government, the messages which were constantly being handed out to them by the two military operators.

The Instruments Kept Up a Continuous Clicking.

In the midst of this busy activity there came the noise of drums, faintly at first, but presently growing clearer and louder, while the tramp of many feet sounded in the street below.

"What's that?" asked one messenger of the other.

"I don't know," was the answer, "troops of some kind. I'll look out and see."

He stepped to one of the long windows, opened it, and went out on the balcony. The other young fellows clustered at his back or peered through the other windows.

"It's the Richmond Grays," said the observer outside.

There was an outburst of exclamations from the room, except from the operators, who had no time to spare from their work.

"Yes, that's what they are. You can see their uniforms. They must be sending them down to the lines at Petersburg," said another.

"Well, I don't believe they would send the Grays out unless there was something going on tonight," observed a third.

"Tonight, why, by heavens, it's as quiet as a tomb," broke in a fourth. "I don't hear a sound from the front."

"That's probably what's worrying them. It is so damn unusual," returned the first messenger.

"Things have come to a pretty pass if the grandfathers of the home guard have got to go to the front," remarked another.

"Following in the footsteps of their grandsons" said the first. "I wish I could go. I hate this business of carrying telegrams and—"

"Messenger here!" cried Lieutenant Foray, folding up a message and inserting it in its envelope.

The nearest youngster detached himself from the group while all of them turned away from the windows, stepped to the side of the officer, and saluted.

"War department," said Foray tersely. "Tell the secretary it's from General Lee, and here's a duplicate which you are to give to the president."

"Very good, sir," said the messenger, taking the message and turning away.

As he passed out of the door, an orderly entered the room, stepped to the side of Lieutenant Foray, the senior of the two officers on duty, clicked his heels together and saluted.

"Secretary's compliments, sir, and he wants to know if there is anything from General Lee," he said.

"My compliments to the secretary," returned the lieutenant. "I have just sent a message to his office with a duplicate for the president."

"The president's with the cabinet yet, sir," returned the orderly. "He didn't go home. The secretary's there, too. They want an operator right quick to take down some cipher telegrams."

Lieutenant Foray looked over to his subordinate.

"Got anything on, Charlie?" he called out.

"Not right now," answered Lieutenant Allison.

"Well, go over with the orderly to the cabinet room and take down their ciphers. Hurry back though," said Foray as Allison slipped on his coat—both officers had been working in their shirt sleeves—"we need you here. We are so short-handed in the office now that I don't know how we are going to get through tonight. I can't handle your instruments, and—"

"I will do my best," said Allison, turning away rapidly.

He bowed as he did so to a little party which at that moment entered the room through the door, obstructing his passage. There were two very spick and span young officers with Miss Caroline Mitford between them, while just behind loomed the ponderous figure of old Martha.

"You wait in the hall right here, Martha; I won't be long," said Caroline, pausing a moment to let the others precede her.

The two young men stopped on either side of the door and waited for her.

"Miss Mitford," said the elder, "this is the department telegraph office."

"Thank you," said Caroline, entering the room with only the briefest of acknowledgments of the profound bows of her escorts.

She was evidently very much agitated and troubled over what she was about to attempt. The two young men followed her as she stepped down the long room.

"I am afraid you have gone back on the army, Miss Mitford," said one of them pleasantly.

"Gone back on the army, why?" asked Caroline mystified.

"Seems like we should have a salute as you went by."

"Oh, yes," said the girl.

She raised her hand and saluted in a perfunctory and absent-minded manner, then turned away from them. She nodded to the messengers, some of whom she knew. One of them, who knew her best, stepped forward.

"Good evening, Miss Mitford, could we do anything in the office for you tonight?" he asked.

"Oh, yes—you can. I want to send a—a telegram."

The other of the young officers who had escorted her, who had remained silent, now entered the conversation.

"Have you been receiving some bad news, Miss Mitford?" he asked sympathetically.

"Oh, no."

"Maybe some friend of yours has gone to the front, and—" interposed the first officer.

"Well, supposing he had," said Caroline, "would you call that bad news?"

"I don't know as you would exactly like to—"

"Let me tell you," said Caroline, "as you don't seem to know, that all my friends have gone to the front."

There was an emphasis on the pronoun which should have warned the young soldier what was about to occur, but he rushed blindly to his doom.

"I hope not all, Miss Mitford," he replied.

"Yes, all," rejoined Caroline, making the "all" very emphatic, "for if they did not they wouldn't be my friends."

"But some of us are obliged to stay here to take care of you, you know," contributed the other young man.

"Well, there are altogether too many of you trying to take care of me," said Caroline saucily, with some return of her usual lightness, "and you are all discharged."

"Do you mean that, Miss Mitford?"

"I certainly do."

"Well, I suppose if we are really discharged, we will have to go," returned the other.

"Yes," said his companion regretfully, "but we are mighty sorry to see you in such low spirits."

"Would you like to put me in real good spirits, you two?" asked Caroline, resolved to read these young dandies who were staying at home a lesson.

"Wouldn't we?" they both cried together. "There's nothing we would like better."

"Well, I will tell you just what to do then," returned the girl gravely and with deep meaning.

Everybody in the room, with the exception of Lieutenant Foray, was now listening intently.

"Start right out this very night," said the girl, "and don't stop till you get to where my real friends are, lying in trenches and ditches and earthworks between us and the Yankee guns."

"But really, Miss Mitford," began one, his face flushing at her severe rebuke, "you don't absolutely mean that."

"So far as we are concerned," said one of the messengers, including his companions with a sweep of his hand, "we'd like nothing better, but they won't let us go, and—"

"I know they won't," said Caroline, "but so far as you two gentlemen are concerned, I really mean it. Go and fight the Yankees a few days and lie in ditches a few nights until those uniforms you've got on look as if they might have been of some use to somebody. If you are so anxious to do something for me, that is what you can do. It is the only thing I want, it is the only thing anybody wants."

"Messenger here!" cried Lieutenant Foray as the two young officers, humiliated beyond expression by the taunts of the impudent young maiden, backed away and finally managed to make an ungraceful exit through the open door, followed by the titters of the messengers, who took advantage of the presence of the young girl to indulge in this grave breach of discipline.

"Messenger!" cried Foray impatiently.

"Here, sir," came the answer.

"Commissary general's office!" was the injunction with which Foray handed the man the telegram.

He looked up at the same time, and with a great start of surprise caught sight of Caroline at the far end of the long room.

(To Be Continued)

The Germans are leaders in a new industry, which is the means of making wood into yarn, cloth, twine, carpets, and imitation silk and canvas, all of which are proof against the action of both hot and cold water. "Silvatin" yarn is made near Berlin, from spruce wood. In Saxony, "xylolin" yarn is manufactured from paper and wood pulp. Sawdust and the waste wood from fashioning rectangular boards from tree trunks can now be scientifically converted into useful materials.

USES OF ELECTRICITY

In the Homes and on the Farms of Germany and Switzerland

Rev. W. B. Findlay spoke to the Canadian Household Economic Association about the uses to which he had seen electricity put in Germany, Switzerland and part of France. The people of the new world are apt to think themselves very advanced along these lines, but Germany and Switzerland have got far ahead in putting electricity to practical uses. In Germany electricity is generated chiefly from steam. A group of townships will engage an engineer who decides upon the geographical point best suited for the placing of an electrical power house. From this station, which is made a thing of beauty as well as use, transmitting lines run out through all the townships, which are assessed for the cost of it. A community of farmers then get together and contract for a definite amount of power, which comes at a voltage of about 2,200, and each farmer must provide a place where it may be stepped down to a voltage at which it may enter his house, say 110. For this purpose he has a small transforming station which is often placed on wheels and can be moved to the part of the farm at which he needs it, for farms are very large in the north of Germany. These stations are also built in such a way that connection cannot be made until all doors leading to the dangerous parts are closed.

With this plant installed a great deal of work can be saved. A farm of 125 acres had a two horse-power motor which lighted the house and barn, milked the cows, separated the cream, churned, chopped food for the animals and sawed wood. A small motor for the kitchen will run coffee grinders, meat choppers and slicers, knife cleaners and sharpeners and dish washers, in which the dishes are put on shelves and lowered into a box-like arrangement where the water is heated by electricity and agitated by electricity. These latter are chiefly seen in hotels, as they are still quite expensive.

Electric ploughs are adjustable to different depths and will plough twelve acres where formerly only two were done, but they cost a good deal.

In Switzerland the electric oven with its perfectly even heat, was brought into use in 1902, and is now used very extensively.

Mr. Findlay drew attention to the fact that Ontario gets all her coal at a profit to outsiders, while a million horse-power that might be used for the same purposes goes to waste in the rivers of North Bay.

NO NEED FOR SLUMS

Western Cities Given Good Advice by Eminent Nurse

As young as the prairie cities are, some of them have slums already, and others show signs of soon having them. This was the declaration at Edmonton, of Miss Mary Ard MacKenzie, superintendent of the Victorian Order of Nurses.

In this respect, said Miss MacKenzie, Winnipeg was almost notorious, and Yorkton, Saskatchewan, had pronounced symptoms.

Miss Mackenzie advised the cities of the west to start right in their city building. She hates slums with all the vehemence of the woman who knows how disease is bred of pestilence and advocated a law providing that no more than a certain number should be allowed to sleep in and breathe the atmosphere of houses of defined cubic space.

THE BLACK BEAN CLUB

One Member a Year Gets Married and is Given a Free House

A fantastic club was discovered in London by "La Revue." This is the Black Bean Club, limited to forty members, each of whom pays an entrance fee of $50, and a similar amount as annual subscription. They meet only twice a year, and then a bag is passed round containing thirty-nine white beans and one black one. The member who picks the black bean is compelled to get married within the ensuing twelve months, and the remainder solemnly vow to remain single until the next meeting. A house is furnished for the prospective bridegroom out of the funds of the club, which also bears the cost of the wedding festivities and of a three weeks' honeymoon.

Strengthens The Throat Assists Public Speakers

Strongly Endorsed by the Clergy.

Because of its strengthening influence upon the vocal cords, Catarrhozone cannot be too highly recommended as a wonderful voice improver. It almost instantly removes huskiness or hoarseness, thus insuring clearness and brilliancy of tone. The most eminent speakers and prima donnas are seldom without Catarrhozone, and credit in no small degree their uniform strength and brilliancy of tone to its influence.

"For many years I have been a sufferer from that terrible disease known as CATARRH.

"Being a professional singer, you can readily understand that Catarrh would be a serious hindrance to my professional skill.

"One year ago I read in the "Progress" a convincing testimonial from one who had been cured of this disease through using your God-sent invention, Catarrhozone.

"Believing in the merit of Catarrhozone, I tried it.

"Catarrhozone cured me, and has been the means of my success.

"You are at liberty to use my name if it will help relieve some from suffering, and I will always remain,

"Bob Bixley, New Glasgow, N.S."

Mr. Bixley is one of the best known singers and entertainers in the Maritime Provinces. Everyone knows him and his testimonial for Catarrhozone is the best sort of evidence of what great benefit Catarrhozone is to those suffering from throat weakness or catarrh.

Dr. Clinton Satisfied.

Dr. Clinton, District Medical Health Officer, left yesterday for Belleville. Dr. Clinton has been in the city the past two days inspecting the sanitary conditions. He expressed himself as being satisfied with the conditions as he found them with one or two exceptions. He is of the opinion that some other means should be taken to dispose of the ashes other than dumping them on empty lots within the city limits. Dr. Clinton believes that the installation of the incinerator will offer a solution, and that steps should be taken to have the plant installed as soon as possible.

New Local Nurse On.

For the month of May, Nurse Sparkhall, district nurse for the Peterborough Health Association, reported having made a total number of 114 visits. See the Bears Suck Eggs.

Yesterday afternoon much fun was caused in front of Trebilcock's show windows. In the south window are two bear cubs, used to advertise the really wonderful arctic pictures now on exhibition at the Princess Theatre. A young fox terrier was put in with the bears. The cubs tried to make friends with the dog, but the latter got "cold feet," and had to be removed. These bear cubs have not, as yet, got their teeth. They, however, love eggs, but cannot but the shells. At 11 o'clock this morning a number of eggs (at 22 cents a doz) will be put in the window for the cubs. It will be amusing to see how the bear cubs get at the contents.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

DROWNS WITH FRIENDS HE TRIED TO SAVE

High School Graduate and Classmates Upset in Rescue Lake, Ludlow, Vt.

Ludlow, Vt., June 19.—The overturning of a rowboat caused the death by drowning in Rescue Lake today of Miss Grace Hastings, Miss Mary Tully and Charles Schonfield, all about 16 years of age.

Schonfield died trying to save his girl friends. When thrown into the water he swam to their aid and tried desperately to carry them ashore, 100 feet away, but his strength gave out and all three sank before help reached them.

The young people were graduated from the Ludlow grammar school last week, and with their classmates were attending a picnic on the shore of the lake.

Some of the persons who witnessed the accident said that waves washed over the side of the boat. Others said the boat overturned when the girls tried to change their seats.

The bodies were not recovered.

UPTON SINCLAIR'S EX-WIFE TO WED

Finance's Allowance $3.50 a Week Now, but 'Twill be $150 When Married.

Kingston, N. Y., June 19.—The engagement of Mrs. Upton Sinclair, divorced wife of the novelist, to Hubert Halliwell, of Poughkeepsie, was announced this evening to the members of the artist colony at Woodstock, Ulster county, where the betrothed couple is spending a sort of prenuptial honeymoon.

Halliwell is the son of the late G. W. Halliwell, a wealthy Poughkeepsie jeweller, by the terms of whose will the son is to receive but $3.50 a week up to the time of his marriage. After the wedding Halliwell's weekly allowance is increased to $150. At the birth of the first child another increase takes place.

The announcement of the engagement of Mrs. Sinclair comes at the culmination of a pretty romance which started with the meeting of the pair at Dr. G. O. Sahler's sanitarium in this city. Halliwell says it was a case of love at first sight. Both were being treated at the sanitarium for nervous trouble. Mrs. Sinclair came here shortly before the second marriage of her former husband two months ago. The marriage is to take place in the fall.

"MOVIE" LION POUNCES ON GIRL IN PICTURE

Atlanta, Ga., June 19.—Killed by a lion on Peachtree street was the strange but nevertheless tragic fate of C. G. Maner, a young Atlanta business man. It was in a picture show, and it was only a motion-picture lion, but the picture was of true jungle terror and hair-raising incident, and when Maner saw the savage beast spring from its lair and pounce upon a young woman to devour her, his eyes suddenly turned glassy and he fell back in his chair dead—a victim of the great shock.

Maner was a quiet-mannered gentleman, with a family consisting of a wife and young daughter, whom he loved dearly. Strolling off the sunshiny street into the quiet darkened picture theater, he settled down for a tranquil half-hour's entertainment when the jungle scene was flashed on the canvas.

Shock and heart failure are announced as the precise cause of Maner's death.

This constitutes the second step in a legal campaign by the women's Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of cruelty to Animals. Recently Dr. J. E. The defendants who must appear before a police magistrate next Saturday are Dr. Allen John Smith, former dean of the medical schools; Dr. Edward Tyson Reichert, professor of physiological chemistry; Dr. Richard Mills Pearce, Jr., professor of research medicine, and Alfred M. Richards. It is said that warrants for other members of the faculty probably will be issued in a few days.

John R. K. Scott counsel for the women's society, said tonight: "This proceeding is not based in vivisection of animals, but the needless cruelty and neglect of the animal after it has been submitted to experiments and operations."

VISITOR AT PRISON RELIEVED OF GUN

New Orleans, June 14.—The attempt of a striking water front fireman to enter the parish prison with a magazine revolver loaded with sixteen steel bullets shortly after 10 o'clock yesterday morning, was prevented by William Brainey, gatekeeper, who searched the man.

The weapon fully loaded, was found in one of the ship pockets of Claro Perast, a Spaniard, who was a coal-passer on the steamship Orleanian.

Perast stated that he was going to see Frank Perez, one of the strikers, who is in prison charged with inciting a riot, and who is a fellow countryman. The man stated that he had no idea it was against the to carry a weapon.

The "Paving Determinator's" Verdict.

THE "Paving Determinator" is an ingenious machine that was built by the department of Public Works of Detroit—to subject sample stretches of various street pavements to severe, actual-service tests. It imitates heavy trucks and steel-shod draught horses, reproducing, in faithful detail, every effect of this kind of traffic.

This remarkable machine was recently used to test five varieties of street pavement—covering practically the entire range of present-day road coverings.

A report of the test says:

"When the test had been made under the direction of Mr. McCabe and officials of the department, on eight sections of pavement laid in a circular track, the concrete section, laid under the specifications of the Board of County Road Commissioners of Wayne County, Michigan, showed by far the best resistance to the severe test to which the pavements were put."

Are you going to overlook these facts in deciding about your paving?

WILL LLOYD GEORGE AND ISAACS QUIT THEIR JOB ?

Times Says That it Would be Sorry to See Them Leave Public Life

London, June 20.—Although Commons unanimously accepted Lloyd George's and Sir Rufus Isaacs' explanations and regrets the position of these Ministers is still regarded as most unstable. Both bore evident traces of last night's severe strain put upon them, especially by the cold warning note of their colleague, Sir Edward Grey and the dignified pronouncement of Mr. Balfour. Their resignation is by no means improbable, immediately or a little later. They cannot but feel their conduct dealt a grave blow at the prestige of the Government. Among the great body of their humble supporters, who themselves knew nothing of the stock exchange speculations, have to-day no sympathy with Ministerial speculators, and especially find it difficult to condone the long drawn out deception of Asquith by his chief of colleagues.

Lloyd George Chastened.

The Times remarks significantly: "We should be sorry if as a result of this wretched business either Isaacs or Lloyd George are driven from public life. The present severe lesson should make them far more useful servants than before. Lloyd George in particular will be much improved by his chastened ambition. Less exuberant and self confident and less venomous his tongue, having tasted the lash of calumny, he will not use it so freely in future."

GIBSON IS CALLED INNOCENT NEW WITNESS FOR STAND

Minister of Justice is Told by Convicted Man's Counsel of New Facts

Ottawa, June 20.—That an alibi can be proved in the Gibson murder case and that a witness can be put on the stand who will swear he saw Rosenthal killed and Gibson was not the murderer, were the main facts which were laid before Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice, by Herb. Lennox, K.C., this morning, why a new trial should be granted. Mr. Lennox laid before the Minister a petition signed by four thousand Toronto people, asking for a new trial, and argued at length why the Minister should grant the request.

New, Important Evidence.

Mr. Lennox went over the case in detail and showed that Gibson had no money at the time to prepare his case and that since his trial when he was committed for murder, important evidence has been adduced. The most important new evidence is ability to prove an alibi, and the discovery of a witness who says he saw the deed committed. This witness does not know who killed Rosenthal, but is prepared to swear it was not Gibson.

At the time of the trial Gibson blamed two other men. This was not taken seriously at the time, but Mr. Lennox claimed that these two men, it could be proved, were with Rosenthal the night before the murder.

Seek New Trial, Not Clemency.

"We have a witness," said Mr. Lennox, after his argument before the Minister, "who can tell where Gibson was when Dunkelman said he was with Rosenthal. I have placed a great deal of new evidence before the Minister and I believe we will secure a new trial. There will be no reply for a few days as the Minister will have to consider the whole matter and will then lay it before the Cabinet Council.

TRIO ARE SHOT DEAD BY MANIAC HOLDING UP SCHOOL

Former Teacher, Carrying Six Revolvers, Started Fusilade Among Class

Bremen, Germany, June 20.—A school teacher and two children were shot dead, another teacher and three children gravely wounded and three other children slightly injured to-day by a former teacher named Schmidt, who, armed with six loaded revolvers and carrying a quantity of extra cartridges, entered a Catholic school and started a fusilade among the class.

The man, who was apparently demented, was overcome and arrested by police attracted to the scene by the reports of firing. He refused an explanation of his action.

THE BIG CIRCUS HERE ON MONDAY

What is a dik-dik and why?

Goodness only knows, but you'll see one, and perhaps more if you watch Barnum & Bailey's Circus parade Monday morning. Almost three miles of procession are promised—three miles of scintillating, iridescent gorgeous, glittering, glamorous, awe-inspiring traffic disturbing cavalcade, interspersed with elephants, camels, bands, steam calliope and a little of everything else under the sun, stretched out in such a long review that the weary vanguard will almost have returned to the show grounds before the tail-end has been started. The mind, when turned circusward, runs to superlatives and one's imagination is inclined to be unruly. Quite pardonable this, when one is told of the wonders to come—elephants, bee-you-ti-ful women, bee-you-ti-full-er horses, open dens of wild beasts, ornate floats and two caravans of camels.

Oh! those camels! They look as if they had been made of the remnants of creation. One can readily understand how the yokel, on seeing his first camel, stood awe-struck in front of the beast, murmuring to himself: "No, no, there never was such a "critter."

Then there will be splendid horses, the pride of the circus. There will be 12 and where circumstances allow 24, of these splendid fellows drawing the leading band chariot, and the man who finds two reins perplexing when he takes his girl out for a livery stable ride on Sunday can look with wonder at the nonchalant charioteer who pilots this remarkable "hitch." Add to the horses and animals the more than 1000 people in the moving column, all of them in spic and span wardrobe and one begins to have a skim-milk idea of the treat in store. There may be carking souls who will affect to see tawdriness behind the tinsel. Let 'em stay away! There will be enough people without them to fill the streets to suffocation, and fill the souls of the traffic policeman with anguish.

The performances are at two and eight o'clock, doors being opened at one and seven o'clock. All day Monday tickets may be purchased at W. C. Kent Drug Store, at exactly the same prices charged at the show grounds.

BEJEWELED WOMEN HELD AS THIEVES

New York, June 20.—The greatest mystery today surrounded the identity of two young women arrested in Hoboken, N.J., on a charge of attempting to pick a bootblack's pocket. The police of New York and Hoboken hope to establish their identity beyond any doubt before they are arraigned, for it is said that gems valued at $1000 were worn by them when they were arrested.

The young women gave the names of Dolly Hadden, 18, and Helen Hadden, 26, when arrested. The street address given was found to be fictitious. Later a man arrived saying he was Col. Archibald Hadden, father of the young women, and after presenting a letter of identification to Street Commissioner McLaughlin the latter furnished $500 bail for the prisoners.

THE WATER SITUATION.

The situation on the river here has been deperate for several days. The Peterborough Lumber Company and the McDonald Lumber Company have been held up at Auburn with their logs, because it is stated that the Seymour Power Company are using all the water for their wheels, leaving less than enough to float the logs down the channel. The Seymour Power Company has been put to deperate straights because the water in the Trent division failed. This, after careful investigation, has been found to be due to the raising of the water an inch above Healy's Falls, covering an area of over 200 square miles. This, of course, left the water below Healy's Falls low, but a message from Campbellford states that the water is rising. Both mills are shut down. Mr. Burnham, M.P., has been working with Mr. John Thompson, Mr. Duignan and Mr. Peck, M.P.P., in an effort, by means of urgent telegrams, to secure the intervention at Ottawa and also at Toronto. The Seymour Power Company, it is said, is not using Dam No. 5, but has secured a large block of power from the Peterborough Hydraulic Company.

It is a good thing to have the river furnish power, but when emergencies arise, if our old established industries like the lumber mills are to be sacrified, there will have to be found some other way out of the difficulty.

It is understood that the Dominion Government intends asserting its supremacy in both water and water power in all waters in Canada. If this is so it cannot come too soon, for diverse authority is doing immense harm to industries.

We understand, late last evening that Mr. Burnham received a telegraph message from the Electric Power Co, of Toronto, saying that they had received his telegram, and they would take immediate steps to relieve the situation, which in their opinion was caused by the hold-up at Hastings.

MR. BORDEN BACK NAMES NEW JUDGES

Ottawa, June 20 Premier Borden returned this morning from Halifax and aC abinet Council meeting to take up an accumulation of business was held this afternoon.

It is expected that the new Ontario County Court judgeships will be filled either to-day or within the coming week. Four of the new judges in all probability will be Col. Scott, of Walkerton, Moses McFadden, of Sault Ste Marie, J. O. Drumgold, London, and H. Hartmann, of North Bay. L. M. Hayes, of Peterborough is also mentioned.

BROKE LAW IN SPIRIT BUT NOT IN THE ACT

"The little bird in Nellie's hat," told a Times reporter this true story of a would-be breach of the game laws frustrated by chance. A local gentleman now residing in his Chemong Park cottage, went out to that summer resort on the evening of June 14th, or two days before the open season for bass began. This disciple of Isaac Walton sat on a stump by the shore of Mud Lake fishing for the humble cat fish. The mud-pouts had evidently gone to prayer meeting, but he captured a few perch and shiners.

At last, unreeling a lot of line, he flung his bait out into deep water. After a few minutes, came a vigorous tug. The line whistled through the rings, the reel sang merrily and the sportsman remarked to his friend "I've got a big bass on the hook. I don't care a ham whether it's close season or not; I'm going to get that bass. Anyhow there's no Fishing Inspector 'round." After playing the fish for some time, it was carefully reeled in. "Get the landing net," shouted he. His friend waded out, held the net and, grabbing quickly, captured a 4½ pound eel. The eel, in its struggles, broke the net and away it swam. After taking out some 60 feet of line, it was finally landed.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Unsettled and showery in some localities.

QUITS SOCIETY FOR STORE WORK

Wealthy Collegiate Graduate Doing Stunt in Chicago

(Special to The Times.)

Toronto, June 20.—A young society, whom we will call Miss Smith, who is a graduate of Queen's University, Kingston, and who is connected with some of the most prominent families here, has been working for a week or more in a Chicago department store, "to study the sociological conditions" at first hand, in order "to get away with her stunt."

Miss Smith came to Chicago, as she was too well known in Toronto. Here she measured yards and yards of laces, chiffon and other flimsy materials for her customers, her keen eyes all the while not missing anything going on around her. The methods of her fellow workers, as well as of her employers, were carefully noted. Saturday Miss Smith drew her last pay check and made herself known. No sooner had she done so than invitations by the score came to her from society leaders. These she declined. She says after a short rest she will again take a position in another store.

"I was favorably impressed with what I saw and also with the opportunities offered young women here." said Miss Smith, "but I am not through. After I have made the rounds both in the West and East I intend to write a book and give my impressions of conditions met by the average working girl. This I will say, however, my employers were kind and I know that the opportunity for advancement was there."

BOILERMAKERS RETURN TO WORK

Toronto, June 20.—Forty Boilermakers went back to work this morning as a result of the decision of the Thor Iron Works to pay the ten per cent. increase in pay asked by the men and grant a reduction from ten hours to nine hours a day.

The Toronto Iron Works, employing sixty men, is practically the only firm which has not signed the agreement. A decision is expected within a day or two.

WILFRID: "Here, I've dug bait seven months, an' they won't let me go to the country."

CHICAGO CHILDREN TO STUDY SEX HYGIENE

Ella Flagg Young Leads School Board Into New and Radical Movement.

Chicago, June 20.—Sex hygiene will be taught in the upper grades of the Chicago public schools beginning next Fall. Lectures on matters relating to personal purity will be given by physicians, and be made part of the regular curriculum.

The School Management Committee voted for sex hygiene instruction after Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of schools, had given her approval.

"High School pupils need something to improve their morals," said Mrs. Young, "and sex hygiene instruction has become essential in the upper grades. The elementary pupils need it, too, but the time is not ripe for children of such immaturity to take up the study of such a sex problem"

PELKEY TRIAL, CALGARY COURT WAS CROWDED

Calgary, Alta., June 20.—The lawyer who would make a name to-day has to have an adjustable cranium, capable of being altered to accord with any professional head size on the market. A criminal trial is conducted in the slangs of all callings, and the intelligently questioning attorney must qualify as "locum tenens" for the job of each succeeding witness.

The talk of Calgary to-day has been whether or not Arthur Pelkey, late down Chatham way, farmer, present champion heavyweight of the world, is also act prisoner at the bar in a manslaughter charge, and to that end the best local pugilistic and medical talent, to say nothing of the city's legal lights, gathered in the courtroom, which was as stuffy as most courtrooms are, and uglier than any in Toronto. Indeed, if it hadn't been for the handsome aloofness of Judge Harvey, with his red-handled pen and his jovial smile, the giddy uniformedness of the red and blue mounted police constables, and the extreme good tailoring of the accused, there wouldn't have been anything worth looking at.

HAVE NO USE FOR THE PRESBYTERIANS

Catholic Register Does Not Love That Denomination.

The following, taken from the Catholic Register, the official organ of the Roman Catholic Church in Ontario, speaks for itself.

We fail to see any good accomplished by the talk-fest of the Presbyterians here. They could have said it all at home and saved expenses.

"Take any kind of a hell you like or none but stay with us and sing "Blessed is the tie that binds," resumed the sentiment of the latest Presbyterian Congress fully.

To read Mr. R. Knowles' description of the Presbyerian Conference, every speaker seemed a giant or a demigod, but to see them on the street they were about as poor looking crowd of physical specimens as we have ever seen brought together.

Dr. Amaron is very much concerned about the French-Canadians "who break away from their Church towards infidelity." The Doctor is a great joker. Did any one single delegate, even the green and salad specimen from Coboconk, think for a moment that the Presbyterian Church could hold such as these, if they really did exist? When the Catholic Church is relinquished, it is either out of loss of faith entirely or some sordid motive or flagrant misbehavior. The Doctor need lose no sleep over the infidel French-Canadians; this chaff will never catch them He may, however, get a raise of salary.

SCHOOLMASTER CHARGED WITH CRUELTY TO A BOY PUPIL

Nine-year-old Georgie Taylor Has Many Weals and Bruises on His Body--Rolled on Floor During Whipping

Toronto, June 20.—Allegations of exercising gross cruelty towards a pupil in his school are made against Principal John Spence, of Kent School, by the parents of nine-year-old George Taylor. Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Taylor, who live at 163 Shanly street, swore out an information against Principal Spence this morning in the Juvenile Court, but a summons has not yet been issued pending the obtaining of more evidence by the parents. It is likely that if the case goes to trial before Commissioner Starr a number of the pupils in the room where the boy was and the assistant teacher who was present at the time of the occurrence will be called as witnesses.

When seen last night little George Taylor showed evidence of an extremely severe beating. His arms and legs were marked with blue weals such as might be made by a strap. Both his legs and arms were much swollen.

The Boy's Story.

According to the story of the boy he was pushed out of his seat yesterday afternoon by another boy and was called up by his teacher for punishment. The lad started in to explain what had happened, but, he says he was hauled off to the principal's room where, persisting in refusing to hold out his hand for a punishment that he thought to be unjustified, he was unmercifully waled about the body by the strap wielded by Principal Spence.

Principal Spence admitted this morning that the boy Taylor had been whipped by him with a strap and that owing to the fact that the youngster rolled on the floor and refused to hold out his hand he received some cuts with the straps on his arms and other parts of his body.

"The boy is a thoroughly bad boy" said Mr. Spence, "and when he refused to take punishment from his teacher, was brought down to my office and I had to deal with him. I have so far heard nothing about any proceedings being taken in the matter but absolutely deny the charge that is stated to have been made by the parents of the boy that he was cruelly used. Such a charge is absolutely false."

Visited Mr. Starr.

When the boy and his mother appeared in Commissioner Starr's office at five o'clock yesterday afternoon the youngster was apparently in a dazed condition and the woman was in tears. Mr. Starr heard the complaint and an examination of the boy disclosed many weals on the arms, legs and body. The Commissioner at once took the lad into Chief Inspector Hughes.

PICKED UP FOR DEAD GIRL IS PREPARED FOR BURIAL

See Recovers After Being Dragged by Cow and May Recover

Newdale, Man., June 20.—Ruth Philpot, a Galician girl, aged eleven when sent to take a cow to another farm, tied the cow's chain to her waist.

Somethin scared the animal which ran away, dragging the girl through the bush for two hours. When a man found the girl tied to the cow, he thought she was dead, so did not touch her, but went to the girl's parents and told them. They went out and got the child and thinking she was dead. Washed and dressed her in white and laid her out for burial.

Five hours later the child opened her eyes and the doctor was called in, finding the child in a feaful condition. The child's condition is still precarious to-day, but she may live.

PRINCE OF WALES BESIEGED BY SOLICITOUS TRADESMEN

All Beseeching the Future Patronage of His Royal Highness --One Firm Desires to Supply Future Princess of Wales With Crowns--Many Gifts are Proffered the Prince

London, June 20.—Tradesmen all over the world seem to be competing for the future patronage of the prince of Wales. Realizing that in all probability another year will see him installed in a palatial mansion of his own they are bombarding Buckingham palace and the prince's rooms at Oxford with samples of their wares and requests for orders in years to come.

So far none of these efforts, although many have represented a great deal of work and ingenuity, have had the slightest effect, All have been returned to the senders, with a polite note to the effect that when any goods are required from them by the prince an intimation to that effect will be sent to them.

ORDERS ARE SPREAD.

London tradesmen and storekeepers who know the rule of the palace have, of course, not yet moved in the matter at all. What happens in their case is that when a royal order is to be given for their particular class of goods a request is sent to them to send a representative and samples to Buckingham palace or Windsor. At the palace the goods are then set out in most elaborate form in a room set aside for this purpose, and the king or queen or the royalty who is buying them chooses from among the various competitors, It is the custom to spread the purchases over a wide area so as to givea as many reputable firms as possible an opportunity of saying that they "supply the royal family."

TRADESMEN IGNORANT

Tradesmen from abroad are, however, generally ignorant of this practice and have accordingly treated the young prince as they would any other rich prospective customer. In this particular instance no pains have been spared to make their wares especially attractive. Single catalogues in ivory buildings, which must have cost a very considerable sum to produce, have in many cases been sent, while valuable jewelry, richly engraved cigarette cases and specially bound books have been everyday occurrences. Considering that the prince of Wales is still kept on a very slender allowance — although the revenues from the duchy of Cornwall alone bring him in a sum of over $400,000 yearly—his fingers must itch at times to possess some of the charming articles which have thus been showered upon him, especially as he is now at the age when the average boy loves to deck himself out in the finest of personal adornments. However, everything that comes along is returned to the sender in the same relentless manner.

The limit was reached recently when one particularly enterprising storekeeper addressed a letter to the prince, "c.o. Buckingham Palace" asking whether the firm in question "might be allowed to supply gowns to the future princess of Wales."

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 3?? George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

NEW LIGHT ON BUNKER HILL

In connection with the controversy over the old cannon which for years has been an object of interest to tourists ot Quebec, it is interesting to note the manner in which McLaughlin, the American historian sums up the story of the battle of Bunker Hill, which occurred June 17, 1775.

"The world knows the result," he writes. "Beaten back in two desperate assaults, the British finally captured the redoubt when the provincials had run out of ammunition. It was a victory dearly bought, and though the Americans were for the moment overcome by mortification, their brave resistance to disciplined troops was of great moral effect."

TURFMAN BEGINS ANEW

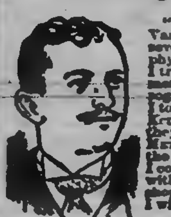
Racing King Now Working for a Living—Fortune Gone

Edward Corrigan, former king of the American turf, has gone back to Kansas City to start life over again where he left it more than thirty years ago. With what little he could save from the wreck of his fortune after the final crash came three years ago, the former millionaire horseman has leased a few acres of land near the 'Frisco tracks at Kansas, set up a stone crusher and has settled down to devote the rest of his life to leveling the limestone cliffs—the same sort of work he was doing as a railroad contractor before taking up the racing game. The former "master of Hawthorne" now goes out to his little quarry every morning carrying the dinner pail, quite as contented, apparently, as though he had never been the most imposing figure on the world's greatest paddocks.

VARICOSE VEINS CURED

NO NAMES USED WITHOUT WRITTEN CONSENT.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.



"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got The New Method Treatment. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

THE BATTING HERO

The batting hero.—None so famed as he.
His name tops off the list from week to week;
Emblazoned on the sporting page we see
His average—of which we proudly speak;
We hail him when he swaggers to the plate
With acclamations of concerted glee;
We cheer him as the greatest of the great,
An uncrowned monarch of the game is he.
Behold the hate upon his sunscorched phiz,
The glitter of contempt that lights his eye,
When, swinging wide that great war club of his,
He pops an easy roller or a fly;
See how he struts back to the players coop
And sits him down with indolence and ease,
While some admirer there uncorks a whoop
And hurls at him a laudatory wheeze.
The next time at the bat he smites the sphere
Far out into the pasture for a run
The while his worshippers rise up and cheer
Him to the echo for the deed he's done;
The sporting editor digs out a cut,
And runs it on the overcrowded sheet
With: "We present a likeness of B Nutt,
Who yesterday pulled victory from defeat.

FINE FISH IN NORTH

Monster Salmon Trout Weighing Twelve Pounds Won Big Prize

The first grand prize for salmon trout in the $2,000 fishing contest, organized by "Field & Stream," a New York publication was awarded to Mr George W. Collier of Bordentown, N.Y., for a fish caught at Lake of Two Rivers in Algonquin National Park. After a terrific battle lasting nearly an hour Mr. Collier succeeding in landing his salmon trout which proved to be 12 pounds in weight, 30½ inches in length and 18 inches in girth. On one afternoon during the same trip Mr. Collier and two friends caught 11 trout that weighed together 25 pounds.

WATCH IN A PEARL

France can boast of some of the most artistic watchmakers in the world, and one of them has accomplished a wonderful feat by making a watch whose case is a single pearl.

This timepiece has just been finished by a Paris jeweller, after fifteen months of the most exacting labor. Cutting the pearl was not the least difficult thing about the novel watch.

The pearl was three-fifths of an inch in diameter. The works of the watch are considerably less than half an inch in diameter, and thin in proportion; yet they were made with as much precision as a full-grown watch, and have all the up-to-date improvements.

There is no danger of these pearl watches becoming common. The cost, which included the price of the pearl, was $6,000.

CO-OPERATIVE FOOD BUYING.

Co-operation has been successful in England, Germany, France, and other European countries, but in Canada there is a record of failure, due, perhaps, to the fact that the people of this country live in an atmosphere that is individualistic. Although it has been demonstrated that many things could better be done together than separately, it has been impossible to secure unity of action for the general welfare.

An experiment in co-operation on the distributive plan is to be made in the United States and what is known as the National Co-operative Company has been organized in the hope of reducing the cost of living in that country, by cutting out waste and excessive profits of middlemen. The company contemplates the erection of 100 cold storage plants, the maintenance of 2,000 retail shops, and the building of canning factories, and 3,000 motor vans. Except for the trifling detail of raising the $50,000,000.00 necessary for the undertaking, [illegible]ything seems arranged for.

There is a greater difference between the retail prices of Europe and Canada than between their wholesale prices. Tariff experts who compare wholesale prices report that the variation is relatively small, whereas the Canadian traveller abroad finds that prices as he learns them, are much lower. It is because the foreign retailer is not compelled to load his prices with as many expenses as here. His rent is less, his equipment is more modest, and his delivery charges are small.

The trouble in Canada seems to b) that, while we have the cheapest transportation charges in the world, our system of retail distribution on food products is the poorest and most expensive, hence those who have studied the problem contend that intelligent distribution would easily cut 10 to 20 per cent from the food bills of the people and yet allow for as large profits as now for the producers.

The scheme of the National Co-operative Company may not be successful in effectin a great reform and improvement, but some day something like it will.

Do Your Looks Quite Satisfy You?

IF YOUR COLOR IS BAD, IF YOU SUFFER FROM PIMPLES, HERE IS GOOD ADVICE.

Fine Results in Two Weeks

Miss Nettie E. Callaghan, a well-known young lady in Middleton, writes as follows: "I was affected for two years with a rash and ugly looking pimples that spread over my face My color was poor, and my blood evidently completely out of order. Certainly it was a most despairing sort of a case, because various treatments did but little to help me. A friend of mine in Toronto, Ont., advised me to get Dr. Hamilton's Pills, so I sent at once for five boxes. In two weeks I felt like new—looks improved, spirits rose, and I felt I was getting well. I have used this remedy for a long time, and now wouldn't be without it."

If you are in ailing health, have blood disorders, stomach trouble, or headaches, Dr. Hamilton's Pills will help you quickly. All druggists and storekeepers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. 25c. per box, five for $1.00. Sent postpaid by the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Ont.

EXPENSIVE STOCKINGS

Gold Thread Hosiery Worn by Extravagant French Women

Among the latest extravagances of fashion in Paris are stockings at $300 a pair. Some are encrusted with the finest lace; others are woven of gold and silver thread.

Handkerchiefs so finely woven by hand that they are "almost transparent, and adorned simply by a striped border, may be had for the very reasonable price of $40 a dozen.

The latest novelty is a tiny bulldog carved in rock crystal or amethyst, and meant to decorate an umbrella handle or to be placed as an ornament on the blotter on the writing table. It is sold in a green kennel, under the roof of which is an enamel plaque bearing such names as Flirt, Fanny or Toby.

Fashionable Parisian women have taken to drinking tea extensively, not so much because they are fond of it, but because visits to the tea-rooms give them an opportunity of displaying their elaborate frocks.

Woman should not make herself heard in the world by wearing loud clothes.

WHALE INDUSTRY

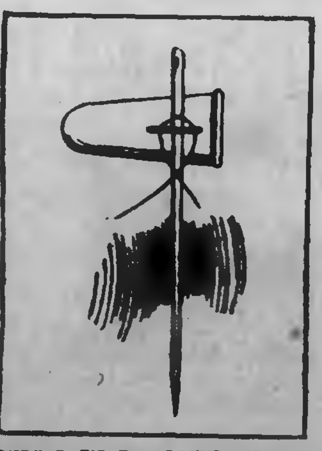
About 20,000 Whales Are Killed Every Year

The exports of whale oil from Canada, the produce of the Dominion, last year were 2,422,845 gallons, of valde, $958,189, as compared with 1,352,253 gallons, valued at $374,402, previously. In Newfoundland, however, the whaling industry showed a decrease. The yield of oil was 8,237 barrels, as against 10,420 barrels the previous years, and the output of guano, 445 tons, against 618 tons. All that is left of the large fleet which formerly operated on the Newfoundland coast are seven vessels, and an attempt to revive whaling of the St. Lawrence River last year was anything but satisfactory. The Newfoundland catch was 294 fish. Ten years ago, the average kill for about sixteen ships was about 1,200 fish. An especially constructed steam whaler was sent into Davis Strait with orders to pursue the white whale. The result was the capture of twenty-four finner whales, and it is not expected that the experiment will be repeated. In the Northern Pacific there are still a number of old-fashioned whalers which pursue the right whale into the Behring sea and neighborhood, and which hail from San Francisco. The most lucrative business in whaling in recent years has been done off the coast of British Columbia. The seas there have proved well stocked with the finner variety, and two or three new companies have been formed to operate off the coasts of islands of Alaska. The kill there last year was some 700. Whalers are also finding a foothold in Japan, where the greater part of the carcasses is used for food, the Japanese being partial to it. Some 120 vessels are estimated to have been engaged in whaling north of the equator, including Japan, and the catch was about 5,000 fish, yielding about 156,000 barrels, or some 20,000 tons of oil, valued at about $3,256,000. A Newfoundland authority, in summing up the whaling industry of the world, says that 20,000 whales are killed every year. During last year this enormous total was increased by 2,500, the total of that year's kill of cetaceans being 22,500, yielding 2,620,000 barrels of oil, valued at between $12,500,000 and $15,000,000. Still enormous as these figures are, they are not nearly as great as those of the number of these mighty fish killed annually in other times. United States records show that in 1846 that country alone had no fewer than 722 vessels engaged in the whale fishery, which brought home products valued at $21,000,000, and as some of the prices for whale products at that time were much lower than they are to-day, these figures would represent a proportionately greater catch than if measured by modern rates. The chief whaling grounds are in the neighborhood of the Faroes, Iceland, off the coast of Norway, off Shetland, and the Hebrides, the west coast of Ireland, Newfoundland, New Bedford, South Georgia, South Shetland, Grahamland, Falkland Islands, off Chili and Galapogos, off the west coast of Africa and the east coast of South America. The results in the Southern seas are now much greater than in the Northern. In South Georgia alone 7,000 whales were brought in last year, yielding about 200,000 barrels of oil. In the South Shetland, another dependency of the Falkland Islands, 3,500 whales, yielding 100,000 barrels of oil, were captured, while the whalers of South Africa accounted for 4,000 whales, giving 120,000 barrels. The total catch in the Southern hemisphere was about 17,500 whales, yielding about 500,000 barrels of oil, representing a gross value of about $8,650,000. The total value of the catch of the whole whaling industry for a year thus amounts to about $12,275,000.

NEEDLE THREADER

Acts Automatically as Needle is Drawn Through Slot

A little device which will save many women time and eye strain has been patented by an Indiana woman. It is a needle threader, and its action is practically automatic. In connection with it a thimble is used or to be more exact, the threading device is mounted on the thimble. It consists of a flat, narrow strip of metal with a central transverse eye and inwardly inclined end walls. The head of the needle passes through this eye and the thread is brought around the end walls and wrapped once around it. As the needle is drawn through the eye the thread is hooked into its own eye through the lower end, which is open. The free part of the eye, however, is resilient and opens only at the pressure from without that is exerted by the thread sliding through it.



THREAD WRAPS AROUND NEEDLE

The United States, Great Britain and Germany together produce more than 80 per cent. of the world's coal.

A new baking powder is being made from a heretofore valueless by-product of the manufacture of maple syrup.

Two Hearts Each

A woman and her three children living in a Pennsylvania city recently were discovered by a physician to have two hearts apiece, one on each side.

French Battleships

New French battleships will have three turrets, each enclosing four 12-inch guns, all of which can be used at the same time on either side of a vessel.

SPORTING NEWS

TURF.

Terra Haute, Ind., June 20. — Fire started by lightning late last night burned to death eleven race horses in the stables at the county fair grounds here. The animals were valued at $25,000.

CRICKET.

The Australian cricket team, which is scheduled to play a series of matches in Philadelphia, has arrived there. Their first match will be played Friday, when they meet the Gentlemen of Philadelphia.

ATHLETICS.

A world's record for a four-mile relay race was made at Easton, Pa., yesterday by the team of the Boston A. A., when they covered the distance in 17 minutes 51 1-5 seconds. They were Mahoney, Marceans, Powers and Hedlund.

CANOEING.

Toronto Canoe Club's annual regatta will be held Saturday. Seven war canoes are ready, and possibly Humber Bay may send one. The open events are:—Senior singles, senior tandems, senior single-blade fours, senior double-blade fours, half-mile canoe (Gooch Shield).

BASEBALL.

John McGraw says: The American League race has developed into a beautiful battle. In the early days of spring it looked as if it would be a walkaway for the Athletics, but out of the stable of dark horses Cleveland has advanced and is giving the Philadelphia team a great old nip and tuck fight. The Naps were not reckoned in the pennant running by any of the experts before the season; they lost many of their exhibition games. The showing made by this club is largely due to the fine managerial ability of Birmingham in my opinion.

Before the end of July the race threatens to become even tighter than it is right now. Five powerful teams have a chance to take the honors. Three of these have only outside opportunities, the chance of the Washington club, rated to be a strong contender before the season, becoming more outside every day. It would not surprise me to see either Chicago or Boston come through eventually, they being the other two of the three teams with the outside chances.

Probably the race will settle down into a battle between Cleveland and the Athletics. However, these two clubs stack up very evenly, with the Philadelphia boys having the edge on experience and general team play. Cleveland looks better in the pitcher's box. Both clubs are determined fighters, the fighting spirit having been put in the Naps by Birmingham. He picked up practically the same club with which he is making his race now, last season, when it was going very badly and finished in grand style.

New York, June 20.—President Ban Johnson of the American league, who was in this city, said he would endeavor to procure one of Connie Mack's extra outfielders for the New York club. Mack has six outfielders, Dan Murphy, Eddie Murphy, Oldring Strunk, Daley and Walsh. Mr. Johnson will endeavor to have Mack part with either Walsh or Daley.

Philadelphia, June 20.—Accused of making bets on the Philadelphia-Cleveland baseball game, 38 spectators were arrested in the grand stands and bleachers at the opening of today's contest in Shibe Park. The prisoners were taken to City Hall in patrol wagons, and were held there for a hearing in the night court. Detectives had been preparing for today's raid for some time, and were stationed in every part of the stands where gambling was expected to take place.

The "Regulars" had hardly made their bets as to whether Johnston would reach first, or whether Plank would pitch a ball or a strike, before, at a given signal, they were seized by one of the many plain-clothes men scattered through the stands, and taken to the entrace to await the patrol wagons.

New York, June 20.—A large number of men whom the management alleges have been laying odds on the baseball games at the Polo grounds were denied admission to the baseball park for the New York and Detroit American league game to-day. It is estimated that 150 of them were not permitted to pass the turnstiles and that 50 others who had evaded the watchfulness of detectives at the gates later were ordered from the grand stand.

Zanesville, O., June 20. — Refusal of First Baseman Merkle to accept a close decision and trying to decorate Umpire Newhouse's face in the eighth inning, cost the Giants an exhibition game, via a forfeit, 9-0. Newhouse beat Merkle to the punch, hitting him over the head with his mask.

Hans Wagner is the only player in the Pittsburgh team who will swing when the pitcher is in a hole. The others will stand still and "look 'em over" after the count is in their favor, with the result that the chucker has at least 50 per cent the best of the argument. The Pirates, this season, are notorious for their tendency to wait them out; and there isn't a pitcher in the National League who doesn't know this.

What is to hinder a batter, when the pitcher is in bad, from swinging at a good one? What difference does it make if the count is 3 and 1 or 3 and 2? Only one pitch can be hit and this may as well be the first as the last.

Woman Chicken Farmer

This is Miss L. C. Harding, secretary of the Omaha board of trade, who has a chicken farm worth $23,000. Last year she cleared $4,765 on her poultry and eggs. Nine years ago she had just $40 and a job in a business office.

Saved by Rival Wives

M. Francois Benedetti, a Frenchman was acquitted of bigamy at Toulouse, thanks to the glowing testimonials given him by his two mates.

About three years ago M. Benedetti married a seamstress at Nimes. A year afterwards he went through the marriage ceremony with another woman at Toulouse.

Both women appeared in court, where they sat side by side and chatted amiably. Instead of reproaching the husband, they spoke so highly in his favor that an acquittal followed.

"MUSIC HATH CHARMS"

German Band Ousts Bailiff in Friend's Behalf

A novel method of getting an objectionable caller out of one's house has been invented by a Copenhagen gentleman who had a bailiff sent to his flat. His sympathetic friends at once arranged for a German band to go to the flat, too. Arrived there, the band played with such energy that the poor bailiff, after enduring the "music" for several hours, inquired when they were going to stop. Being told that the band had an engagement "for lifetime," the bailiff urgently requested that another officer should be sent at once, as he could not stand the noise any longer. The relief bailiff was welcomed with a funeral march, and with this tune the band went on practically without interval for five hours. The police were asked to interfere, but answered that they had no power to do so, as the "concert" took place inside the house. The siege was ultimately raised, as it was found impossible to get another bailiff to go near the house, and the band marched out playing, "See the Conquering Hero Comes."

DRAWING PEN FILLER

Tiny Tube Discharges Ink Into Space Between Pen Blades

Those of us who have ever had to fill mechanical drawing pens, whether we are draughtsmen or merely dabbled in mechanical drawing at school, know that it is a rather tedious operation that requires the use of another pen, and must be done carefully. A Massachusetts man has patented an automatic filler that seems to meet the requirements in a most satisfactory way. A reservoir for the ink has a small discharge tube at the bottom. Flow of ink through this tube is regulated by a valve, which in turn is operated by a lever that hangs from the top of the well and also acts as a guide for the pen. To fill the pen, place it against the guide, with its point below the tube, and press down on the guide, or lever. This opens the valve and the ink runs down between the blades until they are filled.

Modern Rifle Wounds

Wounding an enemy in war is better than killing him, for, says Popular Mechanics, unless he is captured it imposes on his side the burden of taking care of him. The Balkan war has again proved that the bullet of the modern high-power rifle, with its terrific speed, will go straight through a man, penetrating the most vital organs, without killing him; and it has even been found to go through from four to six men, one behind the other. This puts them out of the fight, but at the same time it is a good thing for the fighter, for it gives him a far better chance for his life.

A Lucky Shot

One of his Grace of Norfolk's favorite relaxations is wild duck shooting. Not so long back he was indulging in this sport with a house party beside a stretch of river adjoining Arundel Woods. The Duke brought down a bird with what seemed to be extraordinary cleverness. The Duchess, standing near the guns, was delighted. "Bravo! Capital shot!" exclaimed she.

"Yes, it might have been worse," said the Duke, with twinkle in his eye; "only it was not the one I aimed at."

Hard on the Bridegroom

"Girls," says a writer in a ladies' journal, "should not rush into matrimony in a hurry. Let them make up their minds to marry the best man." But, asks a cynic, isn't this a little hard on the bridegroom?

PEASANT'S CLOAK IS A "LIMOUSINE"

Here is a poser for the haughty automobilist.

The limousine car is the heighth of arrogant luxury, and the person who likes to look down on the pedestrian from his tufted cushions would probably look with greater tolerance if he knew what the name for his fashionable vehicle was the the same as that given the garments always worn by the heroine in the melodrama when she is turned from the doors of her home and sent out to end the second act amidst the constant fluttering of paper snow and the moaning of the wind machine behind the scenes.

But that, nevertheless, is the great-grandmother of the limousine. The hooded cloak all melodrama heroines throw over their sobbing persons is copied directly from a garment that used to be, and perhaps still is worn by the peasants of the old province of Limousine in France.

Its general outlines, along with the name, were borrowed by carriage makers in the early part of the last century and utilized to make a covering for a carriage that not only afforded protection to the occupants, but also gave the driver a shield from the weather by forming a canopy over his head.

It was but natural to adopt it into the automobile makeup, therefore, when automobiles needed different kinds of names.

SEVEN LEAGUE BOOTS

Latest Type of Roller Skates Being Tried in Switzerland

Swiss soldiers have recently been experimenting with what have been humorously dubbed the new seven-league boots—but what are virtually roller skates.

The skate they are using consists of two pneumatic tired wheels, connected by a mechanism by means of which the weight of the body in stepping causes the skate to propel itself forward. The foot-rest is hung in a frame made up of tubing jointed together at the center and attached to the wheels at the ends.

By operation of a spring in the gearing of the rear wheel and a strand of wire from it to the hub of the forward wheel, the two wheels are drawn toward each other, whenever there is no weight upon the jointed framework. When the skater throws his weight upon the foot-rest the wheels are forced apart, the wire strand is drawn out and the gear, ratcheted to grip the driving mechanism of the rear wheel as the wire-strand is drawn, propels the wheel in a forward direction.

By alternately lifting and setting down his feet, as in walking, or as in skating, the wearer can move very swiftly and easily. The skate is strapped to the foot and leg, much as a stilt is attached, and it is light enough to make the effort of using it little more than that of ordinary skating, while the distance that can be covered in a brief time is remarkable.

Made a Mess of it

A youth of 84 who was in the habit of jumping from moving vehicles to exhibit his nimbleness, has done it once too often. At the inquest it was mentioned that after falling on alighting from a train at Victoria he admitted he had "made a mess of it" that time.

WAR WILL COME GEN WOOD SAYS

American Army Tells People That Country is Not Prepared

Pittsburgh, June 20. — Asserting that war must come soon and declaring that every young man should have a year's military training, Major-Gen. Leonard Wood, chief of staff of the United States army discussed "Our Military Policy to Preserve Peace," at the annual commencement exercises of the Carnegie Institute here.

"I do not wish to introduce a spirit of criticism against the peace policies which are being instituted by your founder, Mr. Carnegie," said Gen. Wood, "but I want to impress upon you that much as we want to avoid war we cannot do it. Knowing that it is among us, we of the army are training men to handle it as skilfully as possible.

"We know that war is coming. We know that it is arrant nonsense to say that the day of war is over. Wars are not made by individuals, but by the pressure of public events. If war were forced upon us to-morrow it would be necessary for this government to call out 600,000 men immediately. For this army we would need between 16,000 and 17,000 officers. Yet we have only 4000 officers prepared to command. We would be obliged to send our troops to the front in a state of unpreparedness. The evitable result would be that disease would cause more havoc than would actual warfare."

Bladder and Kidney Troubles

Are caused by poisoning impurities which clog the Kidneys; intense pain is the result and sleepless nights follow. The patient becomes annoyed with sharp pains shooting through the back and up the spine. These pains often so violent and acute that the victim suffers the greatest agony and is driven almost to despair. The refuse and sediment which settled in the Kidneys must be removed in order to procure relief.

SANOL, the Kidney Cure, is the only reliable remedy which has a combined affect of acting on the kidneys, and restoring them to their natural condition, and removing Kidney, Bladder and Gall Stones by dissolving same. It cleanses and purifies the system, strengthens and invigorates the Kidneys, and encourages proper filtration. It relieves the pain and gives strenth and energy to the body. Price $1.50 per bottle.

A Soap Substitute

Occasionally we meet with persons whose skin is so delicate or so easily irritated that they cannot use soap. It is a mistake in such instances to recommend different brands of soap to them in the hope of finding one that will suit. Instead offer them the following substitute which is cleansing and soft enough for almost any skin. It is composed of a mixture of equal parts of oatmeal and almond meal, ground and passed through a sieve. The meal may be delicately scented according to individual fancy. It is often convenient to put the meal into small bags for the bath. Use the bag to bathe the body and face as you would a wash rag.

MODERN MIRACLE OF SAINT'S BLOOD

An eye-witness of the famous liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius in the Cathedral at Naples relates just what he observed at an occurrence of the so-called miracle.

The liquefaction occurs twice a year. The first commences on the first Saturday evening in May in the Church of Santa Chiara, after which the blood is conveyed with solemn procession through the streets of Naples to the cathedral, where the miracle is generally repeated during the seven following days. The second commences in the cathedral on September 19, the feast of St. Januarius, and generally continues again during the octave.

"I say generally," writes the correspondent, "because some days it does not change at all, which is regarded as an evil omen. The records show that the time required to wait for the miracle varies from two minutes all the way to eight hours.

"Scientists have also recorded the temperature on a vast number of these occasions and have demonstrated beyond a doubt that the liquefaction takes place not in keeping with the greater or lesser amount of surrounding heat, but entirely independent of and often contrary to the corresponding variations.

"The blood is most carefully preserved in a glass bottle, globular in shape, and holding about a wineglass and a half. I have seen this bottle brimful of the blood and at other times only about half full. For this is one of the most remarkable features of the miracle, that the blood not only changes from the solid to the liquid state of itself, but also that before the eyes of the spectators it changes its color, its volume and even its mass.

"Repeated weighings have shown conclusively that the weight varies considerably before and after, so that really it is not so much the same liquid changing its color, state of density and volume as it is a veritable decrease and increase of the blood taking place. And this with the blood hermetically sealed, in fact, for more than a century the seal has never been broken.

"So tightly corked and enclosed in the second surrounding hoop-shaped reliquary is the blood vial that it would be impossible for human hands to remove the stopper without breaking the two outer plates of glass. When not actually before the gaze of the multitudes this doubly sealed relic is kept in a strong metal safe built firmly in the wall behind the superb main altar. In this same safe is contained the life size silver bust of St. Januarius with the skull of the martyr within. Its heavy silver doors are locked with four great keys, two of which are in the custody of the Archbishop of Naples and two in that of the Mayor of the city.

"Having arrived at the main altar the clergy say a few prayers and then retire with lighted candles to the depository, where the different representatives are in waiting with their respective keys to unlock the great silver doors. First the martyr's skull in the silver bust is carried to the front of the altar; immediately after this the blood is brought forth by the aged canon. At this moment the sanctuary gates are thrown open and as the people press on and fill every inch of space I take my stand with other fortunate ones on the very step of the altar. Now as the blood is held up before the people I gaze closely at it, for now it is only about one foot distant from my eyes.

"It occupies about half the globular bottle and when turned upside down remains perfectly fixed. The blood shows no more sign of being liquid than so much cold, hard, dark red sealing wax.

"From now on till the liquefaction this solid blood is held up in full view of the 2,000 spectators. No one touches the relic except the aged prelate who holds it and from time to time turns it upside down to observe the first signs of the prodigy. As the time goes on the people become more anxious, the prayers are redoubled. At the first notice of the liquefaction a hush falls upon the throng, the bystanders press more closely and strain their eyes to see the transformation. The fortunate ones, like myself, at close range can plainly see the color of the blood growing more lively, the inclination of its surface changing when the phial is ever so slightly tilted, and in a few seconds the complete liquefaction takes place.

"At this juncture, when there is no longer the least doubt about the verification of the miracle, one of the assisting ministers waves a white handkerchief to the choir loft, a thrill of joy is felt through the congregation, countenances change their expressions of anxiety into that of satisfaction and heartfelt sighs of 'Deo gratias,' are heard on all sides.

Profits in Forestry.

The Vanderbilt experiment in forestry near Asheville, N. C., seems to be turning out very well. By a sale made of large timber on 68,000 acres of mountain forest land at $12 an acre, or $816,000, to Louis Carr and W. F. Decker, George Vanderbilt will receive a profit of $690,000 on an investment of $126,000 made twenty years ago when he bought this land at $2 an acre. In addition to this he retains the land itself and all timber under fourteen inches in diameter. The purchasers have twenty years in which to remove the 250,000,000 feet of lumber estimated to be on the tract. Mr. Vanderbilt retains about 15,000 acres immediately surrounding Biltmore house.

RAILWAY ACROSS THE SAHARA

The dormant project of a railway across the Sahara has been actively revived. A French commission charged with the task of ascertaining the most favorable route landed at Algiers, and proceeded to the southern terminus of the present South Oran Railway, Colomb-Bechar, whence a march across the desert was undertaken. The party was led by Capt. Wagner, of the colonial infantry.

The tentative plan for the railway contemplates a line south from Algiers, branching at some point not yet selected; one branch to proceed via Timbuctu to Senegal, the other to Lake Chad.—Scientific American.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith detains [illegible] while the prisoner is sent for. An order comes from General Varney for Wilfred to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

CHAPTER IX—The prisoner is thrust into the room alone with Thorne, who recognizes him as his elder brother, Henry Dumont. They put up a fake fight. Henry implores his brother to shoot him in the leg. Thorne refuses and Henry accidentally kills himself. Arrelsford rushes into the room with the guard. Thorne nonchalantly says: "Corporal, here is your prisoner, we had a fight and I shot him."

CHAPTER X—Caroline goes to the war department telegraph office to send a message.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Mitford," said the operator, scrambling to his feet and making a frantic effort to get into his coat. "I heard some one come in, but I was busy with an important message and didn't appreciate that—"

"No, never mind, don't put on your coat," said Caroline. "I came on business, and—"

"You want to send a telegram?" asked the Lieutenant.

"Yes."

"I am afraid we can't do anything for you here, Miss Mitford, this is a War Department Official Telegraph Office, you know."

"Yes, I know," said Caroline, "but it is the only way to send it where I want it to go, and I—"

At that moment the clicking of a key called Lieutenant Foray away.

"Excuse me," he said, stepping quickly to his table.

Miss Mitford, who had never before been in a telegraph office, was much mystified by the peremptory manner in which the officer had cut her short, but she had nothing to do but wait. Presently the message was transcribed and another messenger was called.

"Over to the Department, quick as you can go. They are waiting for it," said Foray. "Now, what was it you wanted me to do, Miss Mitford?"

"Just to—to send a telegram," faltered Caroline.

"It's private business, is it not?" said Foray.

"Yes, it is strictly private."

"Then you will have to get an order from—"

"That is what I thought," said Caroline, "so here it is."

"Why didn't you tell me before," returned Foray, taking the paper. "Oh—Major Selwin—"

"Yes, he—he's one of my friends."

"It's all right then," interposed the lieutenant, who was naturally very businesslike and peremptory.

He pushed a chair to the other side of the table, placed a small sheet of paper on the table in front of her, and shoved the pen and ink conveniently to hand.

"You can write there, Miss Mitford," he said.

"Thank you," said Caroline, looking rather ruefully at the tiny piece of paper which had been provided for her.

Paper was a scarce article then, and every scrap was precious. She decided that such a piece was not sufficient for her purposes, and when Lieutenant Foray's back was turned she took a larger piece of paper of sufficient capacity to contain her important message, to the composition of which she proceeded with much difficulty and many pauses and sighs.

CHAPTER XI.

Mr. Arrelsford Again Interposes.

Nobody had any time to devote to Miss Mitford just then, for a perfect rain of messages came and went as she slowly composed her own dispatch. Messengers constantly came in while others went out. The lines were evidently busy that night. Finally there came a pause in the dispatches coming and going, and Foray remembering her, looked over toward the other end of the table where she sat.

"Is that message of yours ready yet, Miss Mitford?" he asked.

"Yes," said Caroline, rising and folding it. "Of course you have got to take it."

"Certainly," returned the operator smiling. "If it's to be sent, I have to send it."

"Well, here it is then," said the girl, extending the folded paper which Lieutenant Foray took and unceremoniously opened.

"Oh!" exclaimed Caroline, quickly snatching the paper from his hand. "I didn't tell you you could read it."

Foray stared at her in amazement.

"What do you want me to do with it?"

"I want you to send it."

"Well, how am I going to send it if I don't read it?"

"Do you mean to say that—" began the girl, who had evidently forgotten—if she had ever known—how telegrams were sent.

"I mean to say that I have got to spell out every word on the key. Didn't you know that?"

"Oh, I did, of course—I—but I had forgotten," said Caroline, dismayed by this unexpected development.

"Is there any harm in my reading the message that I have to send?"

"Why I wouldn't have you see it for the world! My gracious!"

"Is it as bad as that, Miss Mitford?" he said laughing.

"Bad! It isn't bad at all, but I wouldn't have it get all over town for anything."

"It will never get out of this office, Miss Mitford," returned Foray composedly. "We are not allowed to mention anything that goes on in here."

"You wouldn't mention it?"

"Certainly not. All sorts of private messages go through here, and—"

"Do they?"

"Every day. Now if that telegram is important—"

"Important, well I should think it was. It is the most important—"

"Then I reckon you had better trust it to me," said Lieutenant Foray.

"Yes," said Caroline, blushing a vivid crimson, "I reckon I had."

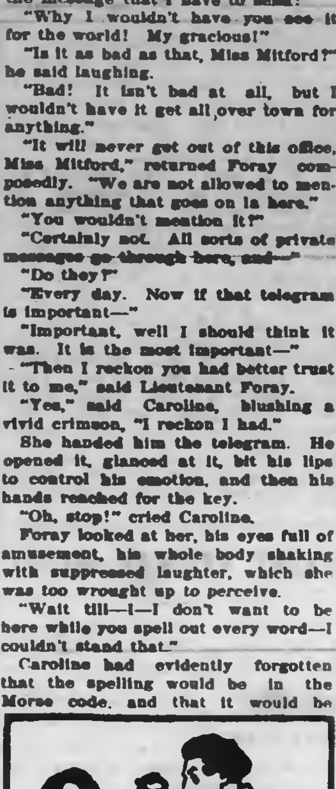
She handed him the telegram. He opened it, glanced at it, bit his lips to control his emotion, and then his hands reached for the key.

"Oh, stop!" cried Caroline.

Foray looked at her, his eyes full of amusement, his whole body shaking with suppressed laughter, which she was too wrought up to perceive.

"Wait till—I—I don't want to be here while you spell out every word—I couldn't stand that."

Caroline had evidently forgotten that the spelling would be in the Morse code, and that it would be about as intelligible to her as Sanskrit. The lieutenant humored her, and waited while Caroline turned toward the door and summoned Martha to her. She did not leave the room, however, for her way was barred by a young private in a gray uniform. The newcomer looked hastily at her and the old negress, stopped by them, and asked them very respectfully to wait a moment. He then approached Foray, who impatiently waited until he could send the message. He saluted him and handed him a written order, and then crossed to the other side of the room. A glance put Foray in possession of the contents of this order. He rose to his feet and approached Caroline still standing by the door.



"I Didn't Tell You You Could Read It."

"Miss Mitford," he said.

"Yes."

"I don't understand this, but here is an order that has just come from the secret service department directing me to hold up any dispatch you may try to send."

"Hold back my telegram?"

"Yes, Miss Mitford," and Foray looked very embarrassed as he stared again at the order and then from the young girl to the orderly, "and that isn't the worst of it."

"What else is there?" asked the girl, her eyes big with apprehension.

"Why, this man has orders to take back your message with him to the secret service office."

"Take back my message!" cried Caroline.

"There must be some mistake," answered Foray, "but that's what the order says."

"To whom does it say to take it back?" asked the girl, growing more and more indignant.

"To a Mr. Arrelsford."

"Do you mean to tell me that that order is for that man to take my dispatch back to Mr. Arrelsford?"

"Yes, Miss Mitford," returned Lieutenant Foray.

"And does it say anything in there about what I am going to do in the meantime?" asked the girl indignantly.

"Nothing."

"Well, that is too bad," returned Caroline ominously.

"I am sorry this has occurred, Miss Mitford," said the lieutenant earnestly, "but the orders are signed by the head of the secret service department, and you will see that I have no choice—"

"Don't worry about it, Lieutenant Foray," said Caroline calmly, "there is no need of your feeling sorry, because it hasn't occurred, beside that, it is not going to occur. When it does, you can go around being sorry all you like. Have you the faintest idea that I am going to let him take my telegram away with him and show it to the man? Do you suppose—"

She was too indignant to finish her sentence and old Martha valiantly entered the fray.

"No, suh," she cried, in her deepest and most indignant voice. "You all ain't gwine to do it, you kin be right suah you ain't."

"But what can I do?" persisted Foray, greatly distressed.

"You can hand it back to me, that's what you can do."

"Yes, suh, dat's de vehy best thing you kin do," said old Martha stoutly, "an' de soonah you do it de quickah it'll be done—Ah kin tell you dat right now, suh."

"But this man has come here with orders for me to—" began Foray, endeavoring to explain.

He realized that there was some mistake somewhere. The girl's message had nothing whatever to do with military matters, and he quite understood that she would not want this communication read by every Tom, Dick or Harry in the secret service department. Besides all this, as she stood before him, her face flushed with emotion, she was a sufficiently pleading figure to make him most willing to help her. In addition, the portly figure of old Martha, whose cheeks doubtless would have been flushed with the same feeling had they not been black, were more than disconcerting.

"This man," said Caroline, shaking her finger at helpless Private Eddinger, who also found his position most unpleasant, "can go straight back where he came from and report to Mr. Arrelsford that he could not carry out his orders. That's what he can do."

Martha, now thoroughly aroused to a sense of the role she was to play, turned and confronted the abashed private.

"Jes' let him try to tak it. Let him tak it if he wants it so pow'ful bad! Jes' let de othah one dare gib it to him—an' den see him try an' git out thu dis yeah do' wid it! Ah wants to see him go by," she said. "Ah'm jes' waitin' fur de sight ob him gittin' pas' dis do'. Dat's what Ah's waitin' fo'. Ah'd lak to know what dey s'pose it was Ah comed around yeah fo' anyway—dese men wid dese ordahs afussin' an'—"

"Miss Mitford," said Foray earnestly, "if I were to give this dispatch back to you it would get me in a heap of trouble."

"What kind of trouble?" asked Caroline dubiously.

"I might be put in prison, I might be shot."

"Do you mean that they would—"

"Sure to do one thing or another."

"Just for giving it back to me when it is my message."

"Just for that."

"Then you will have to keep it, I suppose," said Caroline faltering."

"Thank you, Miss Mitford."

"Very well," said Caroline, "it is understood. You don't give it back to me, and you can't give it back to him, so nobody's disobeying any orders at all. And that's the way it stands. I reckon I can stay as long as he can. She stepped to a nearby chair and sat down. "I haven't very much to do and probably he has."

"But, Miss Mitford—" began Foray.

"There isn't any good talking any longer. If you have got any telegraphing to do you had better do it. I won't disturb you. But don't you give it to him."

Foray stared at her helplessly. What might have resulted it is impossible to say, for there entered at that opportune moment Mr. Arrelsford himself, relieving Mr. Foray of the further conduct of the intricate case. His glance took in all the occupants of the room. It was to his own messenger that he first addressed himself.

"Eddinger!"

"Yes, Mr. Arrelsford."

"Didn't you get here in time?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then why—"

"I beg your pardon," said Foray, "are you Mr. Arrelsford of the secret service department?"

"Yes. Are you holding back a dispatch?"

"Yes, sir."

"Why didn't Eddinger bring it to me?"

"Well, you see—" began Foray, hesitating, "Miss Mitford—"

Arrelsford instantly comprehended.

"Eddinger," he said.

"Yes, sir."

"Report back to Corporal Matson and tell him to send a surgeon to the prisoner who was wounded at General Varney's house, if he isn't dead by this time. Now let me see that dispatch," he continued, as the orderly saluted and ran hapidly from the room.

But again Miss Mitford interposed. She stepped quickly between Arrelsford and Foray, both of whom fell back from her.

"I expect," she said impudently, "that you think you are going to get my telegram and read it?"

"I certainly intend to do so," was the curt answer.

"Well, there's a great disappointment looming up in front of you," returned Caroline defiantly.

"So!" said Arrelsford, with growing suspicion. "You have been trying to send out something that you don't want us to see."

"What if I have, sir?"

"Just this," said Arrelsford determinedly. "You won't send it out and I will see it. This is a case—"

"This is a case where nobody is going to read my private writing," persisted Caroline.

The young girl confronted him with blazing eyes and a mien like a small fury. Arrelsford looked at her with ill-concealed yet somewhat vexatious amusement.

"Lieutenant Foray, you have an order to give me that dispatch. Bring it to me at once," he said.

Although it was quite evident that Foray greatly disliked the role he was compelled to play, his orders were plain, and he had no option. He stepped slowly toward the secret service agent, only to be confronted by old Martha, who again interrupted.

"Dat Leftenant kin stay jes whah he is," said the old negress defiantly.

A struggle with her would have been an unseemly spectacle indeed, thought both men.

"Is that Miss Mitford's dispatch you have in your hand?" asked Arrelsford.

"Yes, sir."

"Since you can't hand it to me, read it."

Caroline turned to him with a gasp of horror. Martha gave way, and Foray stood surprised.

"Read it out! Don't you hear me?" repeated Arrelsford peremptorily.

"Don't dare to do such a thing," cried Caroline, "you have no right to read a private telegram."

"No, suh! He ain't got no business to read her lettahs, none whatsomebah!" urged Martha.

WHO WAS "TOMMY ATKINS"

How the Soldiers of Great Britain's Army Came by the Name

Questions are sometimes asked as to the origin of the expression "Tommy" or "Tommy Atkins" as applied to a soldier in generic form. Mr. J. H. Leslie explains in Notes and Queries that its origin dates from the year 1815, when the "Soldier's Account Book" was called into use by a War Office circular letter of August 31, 1815. Sample forms of the book (for cavalry and infantry) accompanied the circular letter, and in every one of them the name "Thomas Atkins" is used as a specimen name. Atkins evidently could not write, as in the several places where his signature occurs it is given as "Thomas Atkins X his mark." This, Mr. Leslie adds, surely disproves that "Tommy Atkins" [illegible] by the Duke of Wellington in 1843 as being the name of an especially brave soldier in his own regiment—the 33rd.

WHAT TOADS ARE WORTH

They Are The Greatest of all Exterminators of Insects

Science offers a new solution for the bug problem. It is to employ in its professional capacity, so to speak, the toad—the ordinary hoptoad of the field and garden—as an insect destroyer.

In this business the humble toad is unequalled by any other living animal. He is the greatest bug exterminator in the world. It is entirely practicable to utilise his services on an extensive scale, employing him systematically as an ally to keep in check the insects which levy an annual tax of more than $3,000,000 upon our agricultural resources.

There is no reason why the farmers of the country should not hatch and rear their own supply of toads for local service. With a pond or even a small pool insured against drying up during late Spring, the creatures will breed of their own accord in any desired numbers up to the limit of the food supply available in the shape of insects. But one thing absolutely essential is that they shall be protected against their natural enemies, and by no means the least destructive of their enemies are small boys, who through mere thoughtlessness kill toads whenever they get a chance.

It is estimated that an average toad is worth to the farmer $5 a year for the cutworms alone which it destroys. But this is only one item. The amount a toad will eat is astonishing. A large specimen has been known to devour a hundred rose beetles at a single meal. One toad needed seventy-seven myriapods—the household centipede—to satisfy his appetite, another fifty-five army worms and yet another sixty-five gypsy moth caterpillars. Still another toad was seen to eat thirty-five large, full grown celery worms in three hours, while another accepted eighty-six flies fed to him in less than ten minutes.

It is a common thing when the occupants of an ants' nest are swarming and the insects are emerging in large numbers to see an enterprising toad sit at the entrance of the burrow and snap up every ant that comes out. The slaughter he accomplishes under such circumstances is frightful. But of course most ants are not recognised as insects injurious to man; and the toad unquestionably destroys some species which are beneficial to the farmer. Upon the whole he is immensely useful, devouring countless numbers of the very worst bug foes of the crops.

A HUSKY CENTENARIAN

Irishman Living at Uxbridge Shod a Horse on 103rd Birthday

To be 103 years old and be able to say that he never had a headache or a toothache is something that falls to the lot of few men, but Michael O'Neil, of Uxbridge, Ontario, can claim that unique distinction.

And what is more, he has now a photograph in his possession showing him in the act of shoeing a horse on his 103rd birthday.

At a gathering in his honor, many other "young fellows," most of them between 70 and 90, were present to sing the praises of the venerable Irishman. One of them, a lad of 70, remembered as a boy, going to Michael O'Neil's blacksmith shop to get a horse shod.

Also, when the shop burned down, how it was quickly replaced with a stone building, which has stood, like Michael O'Neil himself, sturdy and strong against the blasts of time ever since.

The ancient blacksmith's mental powers are quite on a par with his bodily vigor.

More Soldiers Needed

Major-General Bethune, speaking at the opening of a new riding school at Barbourne, Worcester, said they were told that the home army, as constituted at present, was sufficient to protect Britain from possible raids, and the only remaining duty, to his mind, was to try and make the force as efficient as possible, and to keep up the numbers. The trouble was that enough men were not obtained. The Territorial Force was now 60,000 short, and they could not hope to secure the number until there was greater sympathy with the movement in the country. He thought it was a pity that officers, who called themselves "disgusted captains," should write to the newspapers and say that the Territorial Force was a fraud.

Bronchitis Cured By Medicated Air

NO DRUGS TO TAKE — YOU SIMPLY BREATHE A HEALING BALSAMIC VAPOR

Every Breath Carries Healing Balsams to the Sick, Sore Places in the Nose and Throat.

Montreal this time gives splendid praise for the modern way of curing colds, catarrh and bronchitis.

Instead of taking sickening drugs into the stomach, or using an old-fashioned spray, the sensible man nowadays breathes the soothing vapors of Catarrhozone and gets well right away. This is exactly what Mr. Joseph Daouse did, and writing from his office at 57 St. Paul street, he says:—

"I suffered for years with the worst form of chronic bronchial throat and nasal catarrh. I tried all kinds of syrups, ointments, tablets and washes, but they proved ineffective. In fact I could get no relief. I read in the Montreal Witness of Catarrhozone and bought an outfit. In a few hours I got relief. The air passages of my nose were cleared out, and I was able to breathe freely. My throat was strengthened—my voice improved—and no longer gagged and coughed. The effect of Catarrhozone was wonderful. Now I am well—no bronchitis—no throat distress. I urge everyone with a weak throat, with a cough, a cold or a touch of catarrh to use Catarrhozone freely."

Get the Dollar outfit — lasts two months and is guaranteed. Smaller sizes 25c. and 50c. each, all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Joy Riders in Trouble

At yesterday's police court, Harry Ralston was charged with driving an automobile in the city faster than 10 miles an hour. Ralston said he did not notice by the speedometer he was going over 10 miles an hour. P. C. Reid timed Ralton; it took Ralston 17 second going up George street from Hunter to Brock streets. The owner of the car said it did nat go north within two hours of the time of the alleged offence. Detective Newhall said he knew nothing of the car's speed but identified the car going north. Ralston swore that the car was not going north, as alleged, at the time specified. The Magistrate said he had driven many miles behind the driver charged, and never knew a more careful driver. The magistrate said he would acept a letter from the ladies alleged to have been in the car as to whether the car went north at the time alleged. A local manufacturer answered to a similar charge. He said he had not been watching the speedometer. He might have exceeded the speed limit. P. C. Reid said he had timed the car on George street, from Brock to Murray streets. The car took 17 seconds to make the distance, or at a rate of 20 miles an hour. The magistratesaid the speed law was going to be enforced and a local factory was set back $2. A local real estate man was charged with a similar offence and was fined $2.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

TO KEEP SKIN WHITE VELVETY, WRINKLE-FREE

(Aunt Sally in Woman's Realm.)

C. M. W. says: "My neck is so discolored from wearing high collars I cannot dress decollete. What do you advise?" The treatment recommended to "Anise" wil doubtless overcome this condition.

A. F. G. asks: "What should I do for crow's-feet and for wrinkles at the mouth corners?" Try a wash lotion made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pt. witch hazel. This is immediately effective in any wrinkled condition. Use daily for awhile and results will astonish you.

Anise: A simple way to keep your skin smooth, soft and white is to apply ordinary mercolized wax before retiring, washing it off in the morning. This keeps the face free from the particles of lifeless cuticle which constantly appear. The wax absorbs these wornout particles, so the younger, fresher, healthier skin is always in view. An ounce of mercolized wax may be had at small cost at any drugstore. Use like cold cream.

BABY KILLED BY NICOTINE IN PIPE

South Norwalk, Ct., June 20.—A discarded pipe was given as a plaything to a child here and an hour later he was dead of nicotine poisoning.

The victim was Harold, 2, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Thornfield of New York, who had been spending a few days with Mrs. Thornfield's brother, Harry A. November of 16 Grove street, this city. While Mrs. Thornfield and Mrs. November were rummaging among keepsakes in the attic an old meerschaum pipe was found. Little Harold cried for it and the mother, having no suspicion of danger gave it.

Sitting on the floor and clapping his hands the child imitated his father, inserting the pipe in his mouth and puffing out imaginary smoke. Within ten minutes he toppled over in convulsions, which shortly gave way to coma.

Several physicians were summoned, but they were helpless to stay the ravages of the nicotine. After the baby died Coroner John J. Phelan investigated, but found no official action necessary.

IN CAMP AT PETEWAWA

Third Dragoons are Now Now Hard at Drill

Petewawa Camp, June 20.

The 3rd Dragoons arrived in camp on Tuesday, after a tedious, though uneventful journey. The special train which was scheduled to leave Peterborough at 5 o'clock p.m., did not get away till 7.10, and made slow time, relatively speaking—slower than last year—when they travelled by Grand Trunk to Kingston, and thence by Kingston and Pembroke to Renfrew. The C. P. R. last year covered the distance in twelve hours. It was about 2 p.m., when the boys detrained at camp. It is only fair to say part of the delay was caused by an accident in the yards at Smith's Falls. A heavy mogul engine pitched into two carloads of immigrants and hurled them into the ditch. The engine was derailed and the track badly torn up, but fortunately no one was injured.

The regiment is stronger numerically than last year, having 234 men and 166 horses in camp. Some of the 24th Battery boys paid the 3rd Dragoons a visit the evening they arrived and renewed acquaintances.

A slight accident occurred at target practice, when two or three boys suffered slight injury, due, it is said, to a premature explosion. There was nothing serious.

Weather is fine and warm. The camp is as lively and as dusty as ever.

Six Million—Dollars

Six Million Dollars has already been spent on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad shops across the street from CENTRAL PARK, Transcona. Will you invest your savings where the railroads have invested millions? No one questions the desirability of owning Transcona Real Estate — to buy and hold is to amass wealth — if you buy where the industrial development insures the future of your property. CENTRAL PARK is in the centre of Transcona's greatest development and is nearer the centre of the incorporated town than any other Transcona property on the market. CENTRAL PARK is first in line for water and sewer as soon as permission is obtained to use the Grand Trunk Pacific trunk sewer which passes through this property. All other improvements are right at hand.

CENTRAL PARK faces the Grand Trunk Pacific shops and station, and is bounded on the north by the main road to Winnipeg; the main road to St. Boniface on the south; and King Street, which runs the full length of the property on the east, is the only access to the station, and the only street from the north to the south of the shops. All traffic to and from Transcona must pass CENTRAL PARK. The location of CENTRAL PARK is ideal for manufacturers or warehouses, as the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific runs through the south end of CENTRAL PARK, affording good trackage. CENTRAL PARK is without doubt the cream of Transcona's industrial property, the most conservative real estate dealers agree on this. This property is also strongly endorsed by the owners of the original townsite of Transcona.

CENTRAL—PARK

One of our Salesmen made $232.50 in commissions last week. We want some salesmen to do this in the east, write to us for particulars and literature, CENTRAL PARK has the location, and we know that if it is properly shown to investors that anyone can sell and make this much money till the property is all gone. Write today — right now — for more information. This property has only been on the market two weeks, and already several buildings have been started here. All is activity in this vicinity; poles are ready to carry electric power through CENTRAL PARK; this power is used exclusively in the Grand Trunk shops and is the cheapest power on the American continent. It will be supplied in Transcona at the same price as it is now supplied in Winnipeg.

Three great Transcontinental Railroads are behind Transcona's future. $20,000,000 already expended and under contract in industrial development in Transcona. Two of the largest grain elevators in the world will be erected in Transcona. These industries are all guarantees of the future of Transcona, where there are a thousand men employed now, five thousand will be employed in a year's time. This means that real estate will be worth five times as much as it is now, it is the increase in population that makes real estate values rise, and Transcona's industries when completed, will double the present population ten times over. Now is the time to buy, CENTRAL PARK prices are lower than is being received for property outside the town limits. Prices range from $200 per lot. Easy terms.

A SUMMER PARADISE

An Ideal Spot To Spend a Vacation and Outing.

The unique series of log cabins with main lodge that has been erected during the past year by the Grand Trunk System on Smoke Lake in the Algonquin National Park of Ontario, has been completed and will be open for guests on June 25th. Mr. H. R. Charlton, General Advertising Agent of the Grand Trunk System has just returned from the District and is enthusiastic over this new feature, inaugurated in a Canadian Summer resort district for the first time.

The camp is built entirely of cedar logs; has accommodation in the several cabins and the main lodge for 70 people; is plainly but most comfortably furnished; bathrooms in each cabin, with hot and cold water and is situated in the centre of one of the finest fishing districts in America.

The Camp will be run in connection with the "Highland Inn," the Grand Trunk Hotel, seven miles distant and guests will be able to reach their destination from Algonquin Park Station, either by carriage or canoe.

Indications point to a large increase in traffic to the Algonquin Park this year and it behooves those who desire to secure accommodation to write to the Manager of the Highland Inn, either for rooms at the hotel or the camp at an early date, addressing him at Algonquin Park Station, Ont.

HIS OWN WAKE SPOILED

Boston, June 20.—When Mrs. Christian O'Brien read a notice in the newspapers that James Kelly, sixty-one years old, had died in St. Michael's Hospital, Newark, on Sunday night, she went to the hospital and identified the body as that of her long lost brother and had it sent to her home, No. 619 John street, Kearny, N. J.

Mrs. O'Brien called a priest and an undertaker, sent out notices and telephoned to all friends and relatives that the funeral would be to-day, and that the wake would be last night. Among those to whom she sent a notice was John Thompson, a contracting painter for whom her brother had worked.

When Thompson received the notice by mail yesterday he went over to a house his men were painting and called James Kelly off the job.

"I guess they have you dead up at your sister's house," he said. "We better go up and see about it."

So they went up to Mrs. O'Brien's home and the servant ushered them into the front room, where several women were moaning over the coffin. Kelly tiptoed in and took a look at the corpse.

"Hell! that ain't me," he said, just as Mrs. O'Brien entered the room.

Brother and sister fell in each other's arms and later the body was sent to the morgue in Harrison to await a claimant.

Futile Meeting.

Belgrade, Servia, June 21.—The Servian Government is said to have decided to inform Russia that in view of the Bulgarian attitude in continuing the concentration of its troops on the River Vardar, and in demanding a joint occupation with Greece of the territory in dispute, a meeting of the premiers of the Balkan states at St. Petersburg would be futile

MOVE FOR NATION WIDE PROHIBITION

Amendment Proposed Prohibiting the Manufacture of Liquor in United States.

Washington, June 21.—A constitutional amendment "to prohibit the sale, manufacture and importation of distilled liquor, containing alcohol, except for mechanical, scientific and medical purposes," was proposed today by Senator Works.

The amendment would allow three years for adjustment of the liquor business before it became effective. Senator Works said he had become convinced "that the only way to deal effectively with the big traffic is to prohibit the manufacture or importation of intoxicating liquors."

LITTLE LAKE HAS A DROWNING ACCIDENT

Another drowing accident occurred yesterday afternoon. Three of the Barnum and Bailey Circus employees were out in a row boat on Little Lake, near the cemetery. Two of the men began to rock the boat, presumably to frighten the third. They not only succeeded in effecting their purpose, but lost him his life. The two men when the boat upset caught it and managed to get to shore with some difficulty. The third a 20 year old waiter in the circus mess tent, by name of Thos. Ryan unfortunately was drowned. His body was recovered shortly afterwards and taken to Comstock's undertaking establishment

BIG SCANDAL STIRS UP ELITE OF LONDON SOCIETY

The Difference of Duke and Duchess of Westminster Are Serious

London, June 21.—The matrimonial differences of the Duke and Duchess of Westminster are proving much more serious than at first supposed and a divorce is now considered unavoidable and imminent.

The first intimation the public had of any difference between the richest duke in England—sometimes called the Astor of London because he owns more than half the property in the district of Westminster—and his wife was recently, when she attended a select function given by the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace but at which the duke did not appear.

The duchess attended the dance in the Westminster state carriage but when she returned to Grosvenor house she found the doors of her own home barred against her, the duke having given orders to the servants in her absence that she should not be admitted.

All this was recounted at the time and the reason given was that the duke had not been invited to the soiree by the royal couple, the Queen having purposely excluded him to show her disapproval of married men even dukes, who were notoriously unfaithful to their marriage vows.

Wife Picked for Duke.

The Duchess of Westminster is five years her husband's senior. People of their set are recalling the conditions of that marriage and are disposed to throw their sympathy on the side of the duke. The story of that marriage, it appears, is this:

Some years ago, during the war, the then very young and unmarried duke went off to South Africa, where he distinguished himself for his bravery and democratic bearing toward his comrades. Not far away from the field of battle there waited and watched a woman, Mrs. Atherton, famed for her beauty, and also in recent years somewhat notorious.

The duke wrote back to his mother Lady Grosvenor, that he was going to marry Mrs. Atherton. At once the irate mother rushed off to her best friend, Mrs. George Cornwallis-West, to take counsel.

SUFFS. COMMITTED FOR HURST PARK FIRE

London, June 21.—The police magistrate to-day committed for trial at the assizes the two militant suffragettes, Kitty Marion and Clara Elizabeth Giveen, who were charged on suspicion of having set fire to the stands on the Hurst Park Racecourse on June 9, and caused damage amounting to $70,000.

CHARGE OF CRUELTY WAS DISMISSED

A south ward woman, at Saturday's juvenile court was charged with having abused a child under 16 years old. Mr. George Cochrane, Agent of the Children's Shelter, had visited defendant's home, as he had been told she had cruelly beaten her child niece. He found the child, about 9 years old, had blue marks on hip, and a scratch on the neck, and a bruise on the forehead. Defendant said she had whipped the child with a strap three or four feet long. There was a leather "keeper" on one end of the strap. She had whipped the child because she lied to her. The child admitted deserving a whipping.

Mr. F. J. Boaden, a teacher in the South Central School notified Mr. Cochrane on accounts he had received about the child. Mr. Goodwill provided for the prosecution and Mr. Gordon for the defence. The case was dismissed.

DECORATES GRAVES AT LITTLE LAKE CEMETERY

Yesterday afternoon one of the most interesting, whilst touching, ceremonies, yearly observed here was held, when the members of Otonabee and Peterborough Lodges, I.O.O.F., marched to Little Lake cemetery and placed flowers and garlands on the graves of deceased members of the Order. The splendid band of the Salvation Army volunterred their services and played inspiring music for the long procession. The attendance was unusually large, possibly a record crowd for Decoration Day.

FOUR TONS OF GOLD AND SILVERPLATE IS SHIPPED

French Nation Send Huge Quantity of Plate For State Banquet to be Given by President

London, June 21.—Four tons of priceless gold and silver plate china and glassware, the property of the French nation, arrived in London last night, in readiness for the state banquet at which the French President is to entertain the King and Queen at the French embassy, on Wednesday evening next, during his state visit to England.

No fewer than 115 cases were required to contain this valuable property, and these were packed in four patent sling wagons, in which they travelled from Paris. A number of French and English detectives accompanied the wagons, and at Charing Fross, when the cases were unloaded for removal to the embassy, a large staff of station policemen as well as officers from Scotland Yard and Bow street, were on duty.

By special arrangements the cases were passed by customs authorities unchecked, the initials of the republic "R.F." marked in white chalk on each of the wagons, being a sufficient passport.

A sealed padlock was found to be missing from one of the cases, when it was being unloaded, and the case appeared as if it had been tampered with. Anxiety was allayed, however, by the contents of the box being at once checked and found to tally with the register of the contents. The padlock was not found despite a vigorous search. Among the cases were several cantaing wines and liqueurs of the finest vintage from the presidential cellars.

BIG LABOR BUREAU LICENSE WAS HELD UP BY GOVERNMENT

Agency Charged With Inveigling Men to Mines With Use of Liqnor

Vancouver, June 21.—Affidavits preferring serious charges against the Cosmopolitan Labor Supply Co., a Vancouver employment agency, have been sent to the superintendent of immigration at Ottawa, by the Vancouver Trades and Labor Council and it is claimed by J. P. McVety, of the Labor Temple, that, pending receipt of evidence which is being submitted, the immigration department has held up the license of the labor bureau in question.

This is the first action instituted under the terms of the order in council recently passed restricting the activities of employment agents and bringing them under the control of the Dominion Government, and making it incumbent on all agents to secure licenses.

In a letter accompanying sworn statements McVety sets forth allegations that the proprietor of the lab or bureau inveigled a party of men aboard a steamer bound for Nanaimo, while they were under the influence of liquor or narcotics, with the view to placing them in positions at mines on Vancouver Island where workers are at present out on strike.

There are 1½ to 3 grains of Caffeine, a Poisonous Drug, in every cup of Tea or Coffee.

It Hardly Seems Our Business To Apologize For Tea and Coffee

But simply to place the truth before people and let them act as they see fit.

That easily explains the cause of many a tea and coffee drinker's disturbance of heart, stomach, liver and nerves.

It's a good idea when the body begins to show disturbances, to quit tea and coffee and use

INSTANT POSTUM

This pure food-drink, sold by grocers everywhere, is warranted pure and absolutely free from the tea and coffee drug, caffeine. It feeds and nourishes where tea and coffee destroy the tissues.

Instant Postum is made of prime wheat and the juice of sugar-cane, roasted and blended to produce a rich, snappy flavour.

A level teaspoonful of INSTANT POSTUM in an ordinary cup of hot water dissolves instantly, and makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more, and some people who like strong things, put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate, and have it served that way in the future.

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular Postum (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water.

WILSON CURRENCY BILL PUTS CURB ON MONEY TRUST

Washington, June 21.—Woodrow Wilson has driven a liner to short which has knocked the wind out of Wall street and bids fair to prove the sharpest lesson administered by the government to the concentrated wealth of the country since Andrew Jackson withdrew the government deposits from the United States Bank.

The new currency bill which will be recommended by the President is based upon the fundamental principle that the government of the United States and no other power can issue or regulate the currency of the country.

For years the bankers of the United States have been engaged in a conspiracy to wrest from Uncle Sam the sovereign power of issuing money, and in working out this conspiracy they are credited with having brought on the panic of 1907. Since then they have been insistent upon such changes in the banking and currency laws as would enable the banks and not the government to control the currency. The bill now made public should satisfy the banks in so far as it provides elasticity, but it does not satisfy them at all. Neither will it satisfy the stand-patters on the tariff question, who are hoping for a financial panic to turn the Democratic party out of power. It will be hard to get up financial panics hereafter by hoarding or hiding the currency of the country, and it will be almost impossible hereafter to concentrate nearly all the money in the country in the City of New York.

Kills the Money Trust.

The bill decentralizes money control and disintegrates the money trust at the start by establishing a number of federal reserve banks in various parts of the country.

The Annual Excursion and Picnic of the Mark Street and Salem Sunday Schools will take place to Gore's Landing, on Tuesday, June 24, per steamer Esturion. Return tickets, 50 cents; children 25c. All are welcome.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 15c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 356 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

OLD PERUVIAN MINE

Source of Incas' Precious Stones Found by Greek Tavern-keeper

According to C. R. Kehler, a noted mining engineer, who has made a survey of the Andean gold belt throughout Peru, the principal source of the wealth of precious stones of the Incas may have been revealed near the little Town of Acomayo, in Southern Peru.

A Greek tavernkeeper named Kalafatovich has discovered an emerald mine which bears evidence of having been worked by the ancient Peruvians about one mile from Lake Pomachanches, and near the river forming the outlet for this lake. Samples of the stones sent to Lima show them to be of the finest quality.

The tavernkeeper discovered the first emerald while watching his Indian workmen digging in the old excavation for material for lime. In three oblong pockets were found many stones, one of which weighed nearly 300 carats in its rough state.

Kalafatovich had given an option to a London syndicate, but the Government has asserted its right to take over the mine by paying an equitable price to the discoverer, and to work the mine itself or lease it to private individuals.

Kehler says the discoverey of the emerald deposit is one of the most important ever made in the world.

Where Nelson Fought

There is now a fine field of cotton where over a hundred years ago some of Nelson's ships floated at the battle of the Nile.

Delegates of the International Cotton Federation in Egypt visited, near Aboukir Bay, an estate of 30,000 acres which has been reclaimed from the Mediterranean. Forty years ago the land was covered by a lake, but has now been drained.

IN NICK OF TIME

Two Airmen Stranded in the Mountains Narrowly Escape Being Strung Up.

BY GERTRUDE MARY SHERIDAN.

"I'm afraid that pretty sister o' yours will never see my much vaunted trophy," said Elwyn Moore, airman.

"She's got to. I promised her. I wrote her all about it, and you. So brace up, old man. Take your pick. The long stick—south. The short stick—east. Choose."

It was an impressive scene and an unusual one. Upon a broad plateau in the heart of the North Carolina mountains rested the monoplane Victor. The two expert bird men had just carried off the honors in an aero meet at Savannah. They designed a trip to the home of Nelson Barton in Delaware, where his father and his sister awaited them. Now, in a flight over a desolate, well nigh uninhabited country, the "juice" had given out in the carburetor and the Victor was "stalled." Gasoline must be found or the machine abandoned.

After a brief consultation the two men had decided to start out in search of some town. Barton hid all but the ends of two twigs in his hand. Moore drew the long one—south. Barton started east with the laughing boast that he would be back first with the needful fuel for the engine.

It was nightfall when Barton toiled slowly down a winding valley—lost. All that day he had not come across a single human being or habitation.

"This is getting pretty desperate," decided Barton. "I cannot hope to find my way back to the airship. I may wander for days without coming to a town or settlement. Ah, at last—a light."

He traced it to a rude hut. But though he knocked repeatedly at the door and rapped on the windows, no one responded. Suddenly loud shouts and then shots in the distance attracted his attention. Following the same a great lurid glow sprang up across the eastern horizon.

A Vivid Picture Halted, Appalled Him

"A fire!" exclaimed Barton, and he started toward it. A terrific hubbub increased as he advanced. He had progressed to where he could see the flames through the trees, when coming rushing towards him, uttering terrified moans, he made out a pale-faced, wild eyed woman.

She clasped a little babe close to her breast, and holding her by the hand dragged a little girl sobbing pitifully with fright and weariness.

"My good woman," spoke Barton, stepping directly in the path of the flying fugitive, "what is the trouble?"

She gave a shriek at being so startlingly challenged. Then: "It is a stranger? Oh, sir, we are lost! The Dollivars are making a raid. They have burned four of our houses. They will be to ours next, and probably kill us if they discover us."

"The Dollivars!" repeated Barton vaguely, and then a quick memory of the desperate doings in these lonely Carolina mountain fastnesses came to him, and he asked: "You mean a family feud?"

"Just that," nodded the woman. "Oh, hide us quickly! They are coming this way."

Barton got the three refugees into a copse and saw a party of a dozen rough men armed and carrying torches pass them by. Then there were more shots and shouts and a new lurid glare crossed the sky.

"It is our home," mourned the woman. "And they will search for me and my little ones. I can run with the baby, but I cannot carry the little girl, too. Oh, sir, help us."

"I'll try, at least," announced Barton firmly, roused by sympathy for the poor creatures.

"My husband and his band are in a refuge camp twenty miles south of here," explained the woman. "The Dollivars have taken advantage of their absence. I must reach them and tell of what is going on."

The woman carrying the babe and leading the way, Barton with the little girl in his arms, they started on a forlorn tramp.

"We are almost there," announced the woman nearly four hours later as they started down a tortuous gap in the mountains. "There is the glow of their camp fire. Oh, I am so glad, so thankful to you." And then with the words she sank to the grass and swooned dead away. Barton placed the babe in a safe position in its blanket, and told the little girl to stay there and watch her mother.

Twenty steps brought the aviator in full view of the outlaw camp. A vivid picture halted, appalled him. A group of men were gathered near a camp fire, and over a branch of a great tree close at hand ran a rope. One end encircled the neck of a man with arms and feet tightly bound.

"Why! Why! Why!" shouted out Nelson Barton in three tones of rising horror, "it is my friend, my partner, Elwyn Moore! Stop! Stop!" he screamed, rushing forward and waving his arms wildly.

Half a dozen rifles covered him in an instant, but he never halted. Straight up to the outlaw leader he dashed.

"What's this?" fiercely challenged that person, keen suspicion in his swarthy face.

"This is my friend," proceeded Barton, pointing to Moore.

"Detective? Why, we are airmen."

"And found a new way to sneak into our district where we shoot strangers on sight? Here, boys, tie this one, too!"

Suddenly the outlaw turned. The little girl had followed Barton. Now, arms outstretched, she came into view.

"Mary, little Mary!" gasped the outlaw. "How did you come here?"

"I brought her," said Barton quickly; "your wife and baby, too. They are back near the spring. The Dollivers have raided your homes, and—"

A cry of rage went up from the rough crowd. The strangers were for a moment forgotten. The woman and babe were brought into the camp. Then there were rapid explanations. Half of the men sprang to their horses, and with direful threats swept north to add another sanguinary chapter to the great Dolliver family feud.

The outlaw chieftain came back to the camp fire with tears in his eyes, and gentle as a lamb. Instantly Moore was released. He overwhelmed Barton with thanks. He learned the real mission of the aviators in that forbidden district.

"Four of you," he shouted to his men, "get to Shelbyville fast as you can, and bring back fifty gallons of gasoline. If the town is asleep, shoot it up. Be back by daylight. These friends of ours must be back to their airship and the rest of us on the trail of the Dollivers."

"Ask him to give me my trophy," whispered Moore to his friend.

"Your trophy?"

"Yes, see it's been a target fastened to that tree yonder. These illiterate fellows can't read, and insisted that the badge was that of a secret service detective."

The trophy, plus one deep bullet dent, was returned to its owner with apologies.

The airship made a brilliant nonstop flight, almost beating the record. A guest at the Barton home, Elwyn Moore had the coveted chance to present himself and his trophy to pretty Mabel Barton.

She admired it, and its owner as well. The result was natural. The trophy became a family heirloom. It was not only a reminder of the skill of its owner, but of that weird hour in the moonshiner's camp when the loyal Nelson Barton arrived "just in time!"

EDITORIAL NOTES

Prince Albert has been in Canada, and has seen Niagara Falls, and some other of our wonders. But let us whisper it, His Royal Highness expressed a burning desire to see a game of baseball, that terrible pastime of the uncouth democracy.

It develops that the late laureate of England drew a salary of only $350 a year, which accounts for the quality of his verse: "Darn poor pay, darn verse: "Darn poor pay, darn poor poetry."

Our old friend, Porfirio Diaz says he would not care to participate again in the politics of his country, and who can blame him? Just now the politics of Mexico is too heavily loaded with gunpowder, dynamite and cold steel to attract a wise man.

The fact that Hon. U. L. Borden has been a year and nine months on the job as Premier, and has not yet dropped a monkeywrench into the administration's machinery ought to vall for a few words of explanation from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was doing considerable prophesving a short time ago.

Lanada has no room in her public life for the men who wish to see this country separate from the motherland like the "ripe fruit from the parent tree" Sir Wilfrid's record is one of detachment, instead of strengthening the ties which bind Canada to the Empire.

THE RIGHT BEGINNING

The first Parliament of the Chinese Republic has indicated a sincere desire to be parliamentary, even if it is uncertain whether its laws and acts and commands and resolutions will be granted beyond a six mile limit measured from the parliament house.

For a picture of the members filing into the legislative halls shows them one and all to be dressed according to the standard set for public men in the parts of the world where parliamentary government is recognised. Everyone wears the long frock of statesmanship, everyone bears upon his head or carries in his hand a high hat, black and shining. These makers of laws, recently of the silken gown and perfumed pigtail, have learned that if one would pilot the ship of state, one must be dressed the part.

INDIGESTION, GAS OR SICK, SOUR STOMACH

Time It!—"Pape's Diapepsin" makes your upset, bloated stomach feel fine in five minutes.

"Really does" put bad stomachs in order—"really does" overcome indigestion, dyspepsia, gas, heartburn and sourness in five minutes—that—just that—makes Pape's Diapepsin the largest selling stomach regulator in the world. If what you eat ferments into stubborn lumps, you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food and acid; head is dizzy and aches; breath foul; tongue coated; your insides filled with bile and indigestible waste, remember the moment "Pape's Diapepsin" comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. It's truly astonishing—almost marvelous, and the joy is its harmlessness.

A large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin will give you a hundred dollars' worth of satisfaction or your druggist hands you your money back.

It's worth its weight in gold to men and women who can't get their stomachs regulated. It belongs in your home—should always be kept handy in case of a sick, sour, upset stomach during the day or at night. It's the quickest, surest and most harmless stomach doctor in the world.

By some means, subtle and mysterious, they have been made aware that wisdom blossoms and fruits beneath a tile high and funereal of aspect. The Chinese Republic has begun at the proper beginning. It is difficult to believe that it will succumb so long as it is patient with its adopted gear and frets not at failing buttons.

A MORAL QUESTION

A remarkable case, raising an interesting question of morals, has just been concluded in the courts of Philadelphia.

Two years ago Walter F. Shourds, clerk in the Merchants Union Trust Company, suddenly disappeared with the keys of the vault.

The bank officials sent out for a safe expert. When he opened the vault it was found ened the vault it was found that with Shourds had gone $1,400,000 of negotiable stocks and bonds, and $30,000 in cash.

Thereupon the bank officials got together and decided to suppress the robbery to save the bank. Not a Philadelphia paper printed a line of the theft—it remained for a New York paper some time after to report the delalcation.

Shourds with his loot fled the country and eventually appeared in European cities. With the securities and the money he plunged into speculations and eventually accumulated considerably more than double the cash he had stolen.

Thereupon through advertisements in the New York newspapers he opened up negotiations for a settlement with the bank. His condition for the return of the money and securities was a verdict of not guilty in the courts of Philadelphia.

The Quaker Bankers were eager to get back their million and a half; but, of course, they could not hope to do so without the sonsent of the State whose laws Shourds had broken. They took the Attorney-General, the State's attorney, and the court into their confidence. On the grounds that the safety of the bank, its depositors, and its stockholders was at stake, the State agreed to compromise.

The fact was communicated to the thief. He came to New York to complete the negotiations; but for fear he might be double-crossed he planted $700,000 of the loot abroad for self protection.

The negotiations were successful. The State gave concrete assurances of its good faith. Thereupon Shourds went abroad again, dug up the planted securities, returned to the United States, and last week appeared in court in Philadelphia accompanied by his wife, and handed over to the Bankers the $1,400,000 of bonds and stocks, the $30,000 in cash, and $5,000 additional for interest for his two years' use of the money.

The banvers made their statement. The State's attorney announced that the commonwealth had agreed not to prosecute. Whereupon the judge ordered that a verdict of not guilty be recorded, and Shourds, accompanied by his wife, walked out of the court room in triumph, to be congratulated by a host of friends.

Oldest City in World

The great archæological authority, Sir William Ramsay, considers the oldest city in the world to be the city of Iconium, or Konia, in Asia Minor. The traditions of the place go back even beyond the flood to the time of King Nannakos, who was told by the oracle that when he died there should come a mighty deluge in which all men should perish.

PERFECT SAFETY LAMP

Medal Awarded to Electrical Wizard for Safeguarding Miners

Thomas A. Edison is the champion life saver!

The American Museum of Safety gave the electrical wizard this title by awarding him the Rathenau medal for producing a safety miners' lamp

A German scientist named Rathenau presented the museum authorities with a sum of money to become a medal fund—a medal to be awarded each year to the person who has done the most toward the production of an appliance tending to make human life safer. This applied to every kind of device. The first medal was given to Edison because he invented a lamp for miners that is absolutely safe.

SAFETY MINER'S LAMP INVENTED BY EDISON

Thousands of lives have been lost because of explosions caused by miners' lamps and thousands of dollars have been spent in a search for a miner's lamp that would not ignite the gases. But there was always something the matter with the lamps—until Edison came along with his.

His lamp is absolutely safe. It is operated from a storage battery that is either directly attached to the lamp or hung from the belt of the miner

WHEN MAILING PAPERS

This Little Trick is a Good One to Remember

Everybody has sent papers to some friend or other person with a marked item of interest to them and when everybody does this everybody usually puts the wrapper on to stay and usually puts it on so securely that sections of reading matter come away with it when it is removed.

A good way to do away with this when sending papers is to paste a piece of fine linen thread or stout cord along the inner side of the wrapper, leaving a loose end on each end. Then when the paper is to be unwrapped all that is necessary is for the receiver to pull the string and the wrapper is neatly slit.

SPORTING NEWS

Now look at the lightweights today, and what they get and what they expect. Ad Wolgast is a good little fight, but he isn't any better than a whole lot of the old-timers. Wolgast got into the habit of demanding something like $22,000 for his "end" whenever he was asked to make a match. He got the money-madness, and got it bad.

After Ritchie beat him and took the title one might expect to hear of Wolgast's being willing to fight all the best lightweights as fast as he could get them, for any fair purse offered to work back into the title again. He didn't do it. Even after he was beaten by Tommy Murphy he had an idea that he was worth as much as ever in the ring. Wolgast has probably broken off and refused more matches and has fought less as a champion than any title holder in the business. Perhaps he's unlucky, but I know some of the old-timers who wouldn't have called off a match for a dislocated thumb, the way Wolgast has called off his match with Featherweight Dundee at the last moment, and called it off for good.

We did't call off matches for anything less than a broken leg when I was fighting.

BASEBALL.

Joe Lake was pitching for Detroit recently against the White Sox, and was irritated when Umpire Hildebrand called a ball on a batter when Joe thought it was easily a strike.

"Hey, there, what's the matter with that ball?" Lake shouted so loudly it was easily heard way up in the press box.

Hildebrand took the ball, looked it over carefully, inspected the seams and then rolled it back to the pitcher.

San Francisco, June 21.—An all-Filipino baseball squad arrived here Monday on the liner Manchuria from Manila, for a series of games which have been planned in this country. The Filipinoes this season have defeated both the Waseda and Keio Japanese University nines. Fifteen full blooded Filipino youths comprise the squad.

Pittsburg, June 21.—It is said that Artie Hofman of the Pittsburg National League club, will not go to the Kansas City club of the American Association, to which club he has been assigned by Barney Dreyfuss, the local club owner.

Hofman, it is said, will quit baseball. He is preparing to return to his home in Akron, O.

FOOTBALL

Rockford, Ill., June 21.—Joseph A. Hunter, former captain and quarter back on the greatest football eleven that ever represented Northwestern University, is dying of cancer of the stomach in the Good Samaritan Hospital at Los Angeles. Rockford relatives have gone to his bedside. Hunter is a former high school star, who made Northwestern eleven with Potter, Van Doozer and Deitz brothers; was compared to Daley of Harvard as quarter back and leader. He has a mining company

POLO.

New York, June 21.—The crusade against professional gamblers entering the Polo Grounds resulted in one hundred and fifty persons being stopped at the gates Monday. It is understood that President Hempstead, of the New York Nations, and Frank Farrell of the Highlanders, have employed detectives to spot the gamblers the result of which reports stopped them from entering the grounds.

RING.

Bob Fitzsimmons says: "Too much money for too little fighting is taking the edge off the old sport. When I first came to America very good men in all classes were glad to fight for anything from a hundred or a couple of hundred dollars up. Only the big champions got big money.

Fighting was a rough game then. It wasn't so much the money that drew men to the ring. Most of them fought because they'd rather fight than do anything else. Why, among the oldtime lightweights, Joe Gans, Dal Hawkins, Kid McFadden, Kid McPartland and that lot — any one of whom would be a world champion today—used to fight for purses of $500, $600 or $700. And they'd fight winner take all and be glad to get the chance.

ALL KINDS.

Edgreen, the celebrated authority, says old "Merrie England" is finding the competition hot these days. There was a time when England led the world in every line of sport. English sailors were supposed to be able to whip the world with their fists. That was because the rest of the world didn't know a cross-counter from a fried potato. Today when the festive British sailor unhinges a straight left or a right-hand swing for the lower maxilliary, the Frenchman, or Norwegian, or Chink, or whoever it is that should, according to all tradition, be on the receiving end, simply belts said sailor on the jaw in the latest and most approved style.

Such a jar! Only a few days ago a French middleweight, a couple of pounds removed from the weight limit of that class, knocked out Bombardier Wells, cleverest heavyweight developed in England in many years, in four rounds. It's enough to make the old knights turn over in their tombs!

Even the events of the past week must be discouraging to the "foremost athletic nation in the whole world." Here the Australian team has come all the way to America to play tennis, and has been neatly outplayed by a couple of youngsters and shut out of the finals. Today McLoughlin and Williams and the rest of the Americans start for England, where, if they defeat the Germans, they will go against England's best home team for the world's championship. The Australian team goes along too—to look on.

And the polo. For years the English have been saying patronizingly: "Oh, I say, old top, we'll let you have the bally cup for a year or so, you know; just to encourage you. Then we'll send over our real champions—our best army four right from India, and bring it back again."

Well, England has sent over her best four, fresh from India, the birthplace of polo, champions and victors over all rivals. And in the first game the Americans have played the British right off their feet, winning without once being pressed or forced to show the limit of their ability.

This is only the first game, of course, but two out of three decide the match, and America's chances look very good indeed.

Take track and field athletics. Years ago England was the only modern nation that took pride in excelling in this particular line of athletic endeavor. America was first to come along and upset part of the British monopoly. America developed a number of great weight throwers and jumpers, many of them of Irish descent. When world's best records began to be credited to America the English sporting public said—"Oh, well—your champions are British, being Irish. And anyway you can only jump and throw weights. We place no importance on such events, you know. Might as well leave them off the program. Utterly uninteresting. Now, why can't you run? We can always beat you at

CHARMED BY BLACK MAGIC

Englishman Said a Neighbor Cast Spell Over Him

A man applied to the magistrates at Union Hall, England, for redress of various injuries inflicted upon him by a person who, he said, had long held him in subjection by the power of witchcraft. The person complained of had for some time been his opposite neighbor, and although it had been his constant study not to offend him, being well aware of the influence he possessed with the powers of darkness, yet he had, in some way or other, been so unfortunate as to incur his displeasure, and severely he had suffered for it both in person and property, as the wizard had at different times destroyed his clothes, tainted his provisions, prevented the smoke from ascending the chimneys, soured the liquor in his cellar, and on various occasions, when the complainant had been under the necessity of going out to business, had so fascinated his powers of vision that on his return home all his efforts to discover his own door had proved ineffectual, and he had frequently been under the necessity of applying to his neighbors to conduct him home.

A Riot of Cash and Beauty

This gown is of very light oyster gray brocade chiffon velvet over a soft white satin petticoat. The long, pointed court train is caught in the back with a magnificent scarf of Venetian lace. The back of the bodice and one side of the front are of white chiffon draped with the lace, which makes one sleeve entirely of lace and the other capped with the brocade. This style of making one side and sleeve of a bodice different from the other obtains in many other Paris houses besides that of Worth and it is seen in many afternoon frocks as well as evening gowns.

A touch of extreme elegance is the graduated fringe that finishes the bottom of the brocade skirt where it is pulled up at the side to show the satin petticoat. This gown is perhaps the handsomest that has been brought over this season and to a woman of fashion it speaks its cost as loudly, if more elegantly, as though it were made of dollar bills. Only a woman who could wear ropes of pearls and diamond and egret feather hair ornaments should wear a gown of this magnificence. But given the time, the place and the circumstances it is the acme of luxurious good taste.

BURGLAR TRAPS AND PROTECTORS

Better Keep the Midnight Marauder Outside Than Fight With Him After He Enters the House

Most burglars are amateurs at the business; lots of them have little real burglaring experience, and they are easily outwitted. Naturally it is much more pleasant to keep a burglar out of the house than to put [illegible] out when once he has loaded his bag.

A good way to fasten [illegible] is to run screws through [illegible] upright frames, connecting both [illegible] and lower sash.

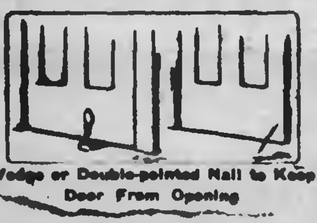
Locks on door can be [illegible] opened from the outside; bolts [illegible] more secure, but if the bolt is placed [illegible] usual, with the bolt running [illegible] door and the socket on the [illegible] any burglar can cut through [illegible] door and move the bolt. Reverse the bolt placing it on the casing, with the catch or socket on the door and you've foiled the man on the outside.

If you can't bolt the door, slip a wedge beneath it, having the big end of the wedge fastened to the floor by a nail or any sharp pointed tool, such as an awl.

Screws to Make Window Sashes Burglar Proof

A double pointed nail with one end resting against the door, the other against the floor, will make it impossible for any one to open the door from the outside, for the more one would push the farther the nail would be jammed into both door and floor.

Another good way to protect doors is to pile some kitchen pans on a table with the broom extending from the pans to the door. When Mister Burglar opens the door he pushes against the broom and the broom throws the pans on the floor. Result: A great noise, and burglar runs for his life.



Wedge or Double-pointed Nail to Keep Door From Opening

If there is anything burglars don't like, it's noise. Tie a weight to a cord, run the cord across the door near the top, fastening it on the other side. When the door is opened it presses against the cord, breaking it and sending the weight down with a great crash.

One man who was bothered with intruders coming into his kitchen and making away with food filled a bucket of water, tied it over the door with just a couple of inches of bucket extending down over the door. When the door was opened the bucket was overturned, drenching the man below. That burglar never found out how he got his ducking, but he never got over the threshold.

If you are going away even for the day, don't pull down all the window shades and close the windows. That tells a burglar looking for "jobs" that the house is not occupied, and he may try to enter either then or that night

There'll be a Frightful Racket if a Burglar Opens This Door

Unchanging Fashion

The thermometer which has served as a model for all those made ever since was constructed by Fahrenheit at Amsterdam in 1720.

CARE OF THE HANDS.

During the cold weather the skin on the hands is liable to chap and the finger nails are liable to become brittle and break off. Both give the hands a very neglected appearance, which with just a little care and time can be avoided.

Before retiring for the night rub cold cream or a preparation of rosewater and glycerine on the hands till it has been entirely absorbed, also after washing the hands rub on a bit of cold cream, not enough to make them oily but enough to soften the skin. This will prevent chapping.

A DIFFERENCE IN BUTTONS

Buttons make the supreme and mysterious separation of the sexes. And buttonholes. If as a man you will go through your clothes, from overcoat to the underclothes, you will find that the buttons are on the right and the buttonholes on the left. But you will notice that the feminine garments close up the other way, and that the woman demands her buttonholes to correspond. Feminine clothes fold right to left, masculine from left to right. And there the problem must be left by a puzzled commentator.—Dundee Advertiser.

WON A BIG PRIZE

A Natural Born Artist, Gen. Savage Should Have Great Future

When Eugene Savage found himself making $50 or $60 per week in Chicago by working a few hours a day drawing fashion cuts, he was fairly well satisfied for he had come from a small country town but a short time before and was glad at first to get an occasional order from the big department stores for pictures. He could draw from babyhood almost, and naturally took to painting in colors, but no one was more surprised than Savage himself when he was awarded the Grand Prize of Rome for a picture entitled "Morning" which he submitted to the committee. The prize meant a three years' course in the Academy of Rome —scholarship practically—with a beautiful studio and nice home thrown in. Gene will now work no more as an illustrator for commercial concerns; he will not have to, as his picture "Morning" made him famous.

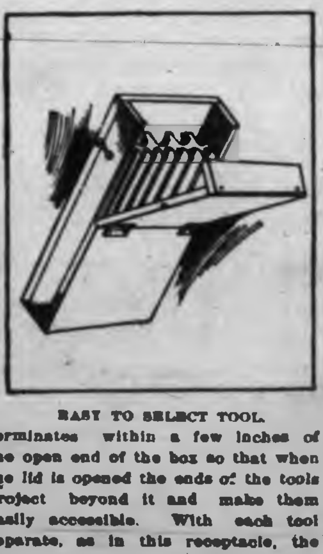
GOOD TOOL HOLDER

Grooves Keep Bits or Chisels of Various Sizes Apart

This convenient box for holding tools will keep separate a number of bits or chisels of different sizes, and each can be selected and removed in a twinkling. The box is a flat, rectangular affair, with a lid that consists of half of the top and one end, as the cut shows. The inside of the box is divided into two by a lengthwise partition, with different size grooves on both sides. This partition terminates within a few inches of the open end of the box so that when the lid is opened the ends of the tools project beyond it and make them easily accessible. With each tool separate, as in this receptacle, the nicking of points and edges, as happens when they are jumbled up together, is obviated.



EASY TO SELECT TOOL.

Tie Horse Like This

The average horse weight offers very little obstruction to a horse that really wants to walk away. A way out of the trouble is easily found, however, if the hitching strap is attached to the wheel, with the line just long enough to allow the horse's head to be held naturally when the strap is on the edge of the wheel nearest to him. Then if the horse takes a step forward the wheel turns and pulls its head down. It will be found that a horse can move but a few feet before it stops of its own accord if hitched in this way.

Contagion by Sweat

The Courage-giver

All day her wistful face looks out
 Above the sordid street,
Through all December's gusty snows,
 Through all the August heat,
A little captive of the slums,
 Unenvious and sweet.

The other children run below,
 On play or errand bent;
She watches them from dawn to dark
 With great brown eyes intent,
Breaking all shackles of the flesh
 In that high tenement.

Yet he who passes day by day,
 And they who minister
Beside her to the few cheap wants,
 Like some awed worshipper
Wonder, before that placid brow;
 "What use is life to her?"

What use? The great and only us
 The chance to face her fate
With folded hands and cheerful hea
 And stalwart soul elate;
To crush the world 'neath strick-
 heel;
 To suffer and to wait.

O brave, sad smile that put to sham
 My anguish of a day,
I owe you more than I can tell
 And more than I can pay;
A lesson for the passing need,
 And courage for alway!

Guide to Motorists

The directors of the Ontario Motor League sent to their sign committee a proposal to put a band of paint on posts to designate the various roads. The scheme is to use paint instead of sign boards, which are often knocked down and otherwise destroyed so that the tourists lose their way. The League will put a band of paint on poles and fences along the route.

Bladder and Kidney Troubles

Are caused by poisoning impurities which clog the Kidneys; intense pain is the result and sleepless nights follow. The patient becomes annoyed with sharp pains shooting through the back and up the spine. These pains often so violent and acute that the victim suffers the greatest agony and is driven almost to despair. The refuse and sediment which settled in the Kidneys must be removed in order to procure relief.

SANOL, the Kidney Cure, is the only reliable remedy which has a combined effect of acting on the kidneys, and restoring them to their natural condition, and removing Kidney, Bladder and Gall Stones by dissolving same. It cleanses and purifies the system, strengthens and invigorates the Kidneys, and encourages proper filtration. It relieves the pain and gives strength and energy to the body. Price $1.50 per bottle.

ARE MEN THE WEAKER SEX?

An English college professor expresses the conviction that women are gaining the muscular supremacy over the men. He attributes this to their taking a more active interest in outdoor sports, while the men are becoming indolent in that respect, and prefer being spectators to participants in athletic exercises. With their admitted superiority in all the arts and graces, including fluency of expression, and to add to this physical predominance, there seems to be little left for mere man but to plod unostentatiously along in the realm of the [illegible], and continue to pass up his purse [illegible] to his mental and physical superior [illegible].

WASTE IN CANADA

Slack Coal And Escaping Natural Gas Instances of Absolute Loss of Money

The waste of soil in Canada through unscientific farming has been tremendous. The waste of timber through careless forestry represents millions of dollars. The waste of fishery resources for lack of regulation threatens to deplete Canadian fisheries altogether. The Commission of Conservation has arrayed itself against these various forms of waste, and is doing great work.

The latest of the Commission's annual reports notes at least two forms of waste of which the public knows little. One of these is the loss of slack coal. From ten to thirty-five per cent. of the output of coal in Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia mining centres is "slack," which cannot be profitably marketed because of high freight rates. Some of it is dumped in the sea; the rest is burned. Utilization of these wasted calorics must be achieved if the coal supply is to be conserved as it should be.

Another form of waste concerns natural gas wells, which are left unplugged when they are abandoned, and thus help to drain all other wells in their district. In Ontario there is a statute forbidding this loss, but in the West it is permitted to go unchecked. At Pelican Portage, Alberta, there is a gas well which has been burning for thirteen years, its product having been going to waste all that time.

H. L. DRAYTON, K.C.
The new chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

ST. PATRICK IS CLAIMED

Anglican in Doctrine, Presbyterian in Position, and Baptist in Practice

Dr. Sullivan delivered a notable sermon on the "Life and Teachings of St. Patrick." Dr. Sullivan argued that he was Anglican in doctrine, Presbyterian in position, and Baptist in practice.

Speaking on the gospel by St. Patrick, the speaker said that in the light of his confessions and his "Armour" there was no sacrifice of the Mass, no confession to priests, no praying to anyone but God and Christ, and no doctrine of purgatory. "I do not blame the Catholics for claiming St. Patrick," said the preacher, "but the Protestants of Ireland have, in my opinion, more right to claim him and honor his memory than have our Roman Catholic friends."

EGGS FROM UNCLE SAM

Some Details of the Canadian Trade in Eggs.

Canada imported 2,500,000 dozen eggs from the United States during the fiscal year 1911, when the exportation of eggs from the Republic, notwithstanding high prices, was the largest ever recorded. While current market reports and current discussions of the cost of living indicate unusually high prices in the United States for this article of consumption and commerce the Bureau of Statistics in reporting a larger exportation in this line than ever before. The number of eggs sent to foreign countries in the year ending with December, 1911, was 13,250,000 dozen, valued at $3,175,000, while the highest record of any earlier calendar year was 8,250,000 dozen, valued at $1,750,000, in 1907.

Cuba, Canada, Panama and Mexico are the chief countries to which eggs are exported from the United States. Of the 1500,00 dozen eggs imported into the United States in the fiscal year 1911 1,250,000 dozen were from England and about a quarter of a million from China and Hong Kong. This item of eggs imported does not include the yolks brought from other countries, of which the quantity imported from Canada amounted to 250,000 pounds and from Germany 75,000 pounds.

MYSTERY SOLVED BY CRIMINAL'S HAT

Case of "The Hooded Man" Paralleled by Others on Record at Scotland Yard

A brown hat upon the sweatband of which was stamped the word "Kelvington" and some figures, was one of the clues which led to the conviction of John Williams, a young sculptor, for the murder of Inspector Walls at Eastbourne, England. Williams who will go down in criminal history as "the hooded man," because the police in the early stages of the investigation covered his head with a silk muffler to prevent photographs being taken, admitted that he had lived a burglar's life, but stoutly denied connection with the murder of Inspector Walls. The hat left behind when the murder was committed is not the only one that has brought the vengeance of the law upon its owner.

In the Black Museum at Scotland Yard is a black felt wideawake hat which brought its owner to the gallows for the murder of a policeman named Cole.

This case was almost an exact parallel of the Eastbourne tragedy. Police Constable Cole, on the night of December 1, 1882, while on duty in Ashwin Street, Dalston, saw a man named Orrock in the act of clambering over the low wall in front of a chapel that faced the street.

He demanded the man to give an account of himself, and endeavored to arrest him. In the struggle which followed the prowler drew a revolver and shot the policeman dead.

One of the clues the murderer left behind him when he fled was the black wideawake hat. When Orrock was captured it proved to be one of the strongest clues against him, for it fitted him perfectly.

The first railway carriage murderer, Franz Muller, was captured by means of the hat left behind. Muller robbed and murdered a bank cashier named Briggs, afterwards throwing his victim on the line close to Victoria Park, where he was found.

Underneath one of the seats of the carriage in which the murder was committed was found a soft felt hat. This hat did not fit the victim's head, and it was the only one found. It was pretty certain that it was the murderer's, but the question arose "What became of Brigg's hat?"

It was discovered that the hat found in the carriage had been bought at a hatter's in Marylebone. Within a short time a cabman came forward, identified the hat, and swore he had bought it for a man named Muller.

Muller was arrested on landing at New York, whither he had fled in a sailing vessel. At the time of his capture he was actually wearing Mr. Briggs' hat, cut down and slightly altered.

Being hatless got a man named Toussaint fifteen years' penal servitude. He was seen one morning in 1886 to be running down the York Road, near King's Cross. Now, a man running in London is nothing out of the way, but a refined-featured, well dressed man running with no hat on is somewhat unusual.

A constable stopped him and insisted upon taking him back whence he came. A short way back the shrieks of a woman led the policeman to the office of a dealer in diamonds. The dealer had been stunned by a blow and $10,000 worth of jewels stolen. The criminal, Toussaint, hearing a step on the stairs, had fled. But he forgot his hat, and this very fact secured him a well-deserved punishment.

Detective Inspector Littlechild was called in to investigate a burglary. The only clue was a hat. The detective examined this hat very carefully, and discovered two tiny black hairs on the inside lining.

Another thing which he noticed, and which struck him as peculiar about this valuable clue, was the odor of rose-scented pomade which pervaded the hat.

There was one burglar of his acquaintance, who had a weakness for scents. His hair was as black as jet, and always plastered down with rose pomade. The sweetly perfumed head and hat got their owner seven years.

"Hats," said Inspector Williamson, at one time Chief of Scotland Yard, "are so easy to lose. Criminals seem to forget that. If they did not, and only knew how handy a hat is in the hands of a detective officer, they might think it worth while to tie their hats on with ropes."

DO PLAYS TEACH RELIGION

He Attributes People's Ignorance of the Bible to Stamping Out of Simple Plays

Is the Anglican Church for the revival of the miracle play? Father Adderley discusses the question in the parish magazine, just issued. "Modern drama," he says, "owes its origin to the service of the Church," and he pleads for their reunion. He attributes the people's ignorance of the Bible to "the stamping out of these simple plays, which taught people the Catholic faith in the best possible way." While he hopes for a revival of the miracle plays, he confesses that it will be a difficult thing to do.

"They cannot be acted with their old fervor," he says sadly, "except by devout Christian people. The cinematograph might be a great power in these days if we would get Christian actors. Meantime we must wait till a new generation of Church people arise who are not afraid to combine an intelligent use of the drama with religion."

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith [illegible] while the prisoner is sent for. [illegible] comes from General Varney for Wil[illegible] to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to ca[illegible] out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

CHAPTER IX—The prisoner is thrust into the room alone with Thorne, who recognizes him as his elder brother, Henry Dumont. They put up a fake fight. Henry implores his brother to shoot him in the leg. Thorne refuses and Henry accidentally kills himself. Arrelsford rushes into the room with the guard. Thorne nonchalantly says: "Corporal, here is your prisoner, we had a fight and I shot him."

CHAPTER X—Caroline goes to the war department telegraph office to send a message.

"Silence!" roared Arrelsford, his patience at an end. "If either of you interfere any further with the business of this office I will have you both put under arrest. Read that dispatch instantly, Lieutenant Foray."

The game was up, so far as the women were concerned. Caroline's

"'Forgive me, Wilfred, darling, please forgive me and I will help you all I can.'"

It was harmless, as harmless as it was foolish, that message, but it evidently impressed Mr. Arrelsford as containing some deep, some hidden, some sinister meaning.

"That dispatch can't go," he said shortly.

"That dispatch can go," said Caroline, stopping her sobbing as suddenly as she had begun. "And that dispatch will go. I know some one whose orders even you are bound to respect, and some one who will come here with me and see that you do it."

"It may be," answered Arrelsford composedly. "I have a good and sufficient reason—"

"Then you will have to show him, I can tell you that, Mr. Arrelsford."

"I shall be glad to give my reason to my superiors, Miss Mitford, not to you."

"Then you will have to go around giving them to every body in Richmond, Mr. Arrelsford," said the girl, as she swept petulantly through the door, followed by old Martha, both of whom were very much disturbed by what had occurred.

CHAPTER XII.

Thorne Takes Charge of the Telegraph Office.

Arrelsford stared after the departing figures with a mixture of amusement, contempt and annoyance in his glance. So soon as the door had closed behind them he turned to Lieutenant Foray, who was regarding him with ill-concealed aversion.

"Jes' Let Him Try to Tek It."

"Let me have that dispatch," he began in his usual peremptory manner.

"You said you had an order, sir," returned Foray stubbornly.

"Yes, yes," replied the secret service agent impatiently, throwing an order on the table, "there it is, don't waste time."

But Lieutenant Foray was not satisfied, principally because he did not wish to be. He scrutinized the order carefully, and with great distaste at its contents. It was quite evident that if he could have found a possible pretext for refusing obedience he would gladly have done so. His sympathies were entirely with Miss Mitford.

"I suppose you are Mr. Benton Arrelsford, all right?" he began deliberately, fingering the paper.

"Certainly I am," returned Arrelsford haughtily.

"We have to be very careful nowadays," continued Foray shortly. "But I reckon it's all right. Here's the telegram."

"Did the girl seem nervous or excited when she handed this in?" asked the other, taking the message.

"Do you mean Miss Mitford?" asked Foray reprovingly.

"Certainly, who els—"

"Yes, she did."

"She was anxious not to have it seen by anybody?"

"Anxious? I should say so. She didn't even want me to see it."

"Umph!" said Arrelsford. "I don't mind telling you, Mr. Foray, that we are on the track of a serious affair and I believe she's mixed up in it."

"But that dispatch is to young Varney, a mere boy, the general's son," urged the lieutenant.

"I didn't know he had gone to the front. So much the worse. It's one of the ugliest affairs we have ever had. I had them put me on it, and I have got it pretty close. We have had some checks, but we will end it right here in this office inside of thirty minutes."

There was a slight tap on the door at this juncture. Arrelsford turned to the door, opened it, and found himself face to face with a soldier, who saluted and stood at attention.

"Well, what is it?"

"The lady's here, sir," said the soldier.

"Where is she?" asked Arrelsford.

"Waiting down below at the front entrance."

"Did she come alone?"

"Yes, sir."

"Show her up here at once. I suppose you have a revolver here," continued the secret service man, turning to Lieutenant Foray, who had listened with much interest.

"Certainly," answered Foray, "we are always armed in the telegraph office."

From a drawer in the table he drew forth a revolver which he laid on the top of the table.

"Good," said Arrelsford, "while I want to handle this thing myself, I may call you. Be ready, that's all."

"Very well."

"Obey any orders you may get, and send out all dispatches unless I stop you."

"Yes, sir."

"And if you don't mind, I don't care to have all these messenger boys coming back here. I will order them to stop in the hall. If you have any messages for them you can take them out there. I don't want to have too many people in the room."

"Very good, sir. Will you give the order to your orderly when he brings up the young lady?"

"Yes."

Arrelsford stepped to the door, and Foray busied himself with the clicking instruments. After a few minutes' conversation with the orderly, who had just returned, Arrelsford ushered Edith Varney into the room. With not even a glance at the operator in her intense preoccupation, the girl spoke directly to Arrelsford.

"I—I've accepted your invitation, you see."

"I am greatly obliged to you, Miss Varney," returned Arrelsford with deferential courtesy. "As a matter of justice to me it was—"

"I didn't come to oblige you," answered Edith haughtily.

She had never liked Mr. Arrelsford. His addresses had been most unpleasant and unwelcome to her, and now she not only hated him but she loathed him.

"I came here," she continued, as Arrelsford attempted to speak, "to see that no more—" her voice broke for a moment, "murders are committed here—to satisfy your singular curiosity."

"Murders!" exclaimed Arrelsford, flushing deeply.

The girl nodded.

"The Union soldier who escaped from prison—" she began.

"Is the man dead?" interrupted Arrelsford.

"The man is dead."

"It is a curious thing, Miss Varney," continued the other with cutting emphasis, "that one Yankee prisoner more or less should make so much difference to you, isn't it? They are dying down in Libby by the hundreds."

"At least they are not being killed in our houses, in our drawing-rooms, before our very eyes!"

She confronted Arrelsford with a bitterly reproachful glance, before which his eyes for a moment fell, and he was glad indeed to turn to another orderly who had just entered the room.

"Have you kept track of him?" he asked in a low voice.

"He's coming down the street to the department now, sir."

"Where has he been since he left Mrs. Varney's house?"

"He went to his quarters on Carey street. We got in the next room and watched him through a transom."

"What was he doing?"

"Working on some papers or documents."

"Could you see them? Did you see what they were?"

"They looked like orders from the war department, sir."

"He is coming here with forged orders, I suppose."

"I don't doubt it, sir."

"I surmise that his game is to get control of these wires and then send out dispatches to the front that will take away a battery or a brigade from some vital point, the vital point indicated by 'Plan 3.' That's where they mean to attack tonight."

"Looks like it, sir," agreed the orderly respectfully.

"'Plan 3,' that's where they will hit us," mused the secret service agent, "is there a guard in the building?"

"Not inside, sir," answered the orderly, "there's a guard in front and sentries around the barracks over in the square."

"If I shouted they could hear from this window, couldn't they?" asked Arrelsford.

"The guard in front could hear you, the conversation to understand that Thorne was coming. Of course it would never do for him to see her there.

"Where am I to go?" she asked.

"Outside here on the balcony," said Arrelsford. "There is no closet in the room and it is the only place. I will be with you in a moment."

"But if he should come to the window?"

"We will step in at the other window. Stay, orderly, see if the window of the commissary general's office, the next room to the left, is open."

"I've Accepted Your Invitation, You See."

They waited while the orderly went out on the balcony and made his inspection.

"The window of the next room is open, sir," he reported.

"That's all I want of you. Report back to Corporal Matson. Tell him to get the body of the prisoner out of the Varney house. He knows where it's to go."

"Very well, sir."

"Mr. Foray," continued Arrelsford, "whoever comes here you are to keep on with your work and don't give the slightest sign of my presence to any one on any account. You understand?"

"Yes, sir," said Foray from the telegraph table in the center of the room.

He had caught something of the conversation, but he was too good a soldier to ask any questions, besides his business was with the telegraph, not with Mr. Arrelsford.

"Now, Miss Varney," said the secret service agent, "this way, please."

He opened the middle window. The girl stepped through, and he was about to follow when he caught sight of a messenger entering the room. Leaving the window, he retraced his steps.

"Where did you come from?" he said abruptly to the young man.

"War department, sir."

"Carrying dispatches?"

"Yes, sir."

"You know me, don't you?"

"I've seen you at the office, sir, and—"

"I'm here on department business," said Arrelsford. "All you have to do is to keep quiet about it. Weren't you stopped in the hall?"

"Yes, sir, but I had a dispatch from the president that had to be delivered to Lieutenant Foray."

"Well, it is just as well," said Arrelsford. "Don't mention having seen me to anybody under any pretext and stay here. You might be needed. On second thoughts, Foray, let any messenger come in."

With that Mr. Arrelsford stepped out onto the balcony through the window, which he closed after him, and he and Edith disappeared from view.

"Messenger," said Foray, "step down the hall and tell the private there that by Mr. Arrelsford's orders messengers are allowed to come up as they report."

The room which had been the scene of these various colloquies became silent save for the continuous clicking of the telegraph keys. Presently two messengers came back and took their positions as before.

Hard on their heels entered Captain Thorne. He was in uniform, of course, and a paper was tucked in his belt. He walked rapidly down the room, acknowledged the salutes of the messengers, and stopped before the table. His quick scrutiny of the room as he advanced had shown him that there was no one present except the messengers and Lieutenant Foray. Foray glanced up, nodded, finished taking the dispatch which was on the wires at the time, wrote it out, put it in his envelope, and then rose to his feet and saluted.

"Captain Thorne," he said.

"Lieutenant Foray," replied Thorne, taking the order from his belt and handing it to the operator.

"Order from the department?" asked Foray.

"I believe so," answered Thorne briefly.

Lieutenant Foray opened it and read it.

"They want me to take a cipher dispatch over to the president's house," he said as he finished.

"Yes," said Thorne, moving to the vacant place at the table. He pulled the chair back a little, tossed his hat on the other table, and otherwise made himself at home.

"I am ordered to stay here until you get back," he began casually, shoving the paper aside and stretching his hand toward the key.

"That's an odd thing, captain," began Lieutenant Foray dubiously. "I understood that the president was meeting with the cabinet. In fact, Lieutenant Allison went over there to take some code work a moment ago. He must have gone home, I reckon."

"Looks like it," said Thorne quietly. "If he is not at home you had better wait."

"Yes," said Foray, moving away, "I suppose I had better wait for him. You will have to look out for Allison's wire, though, on the other table. He was called over to the department."

"Oh, Allison!" said Thorne carelessly. "Be gone long, do you think?" he continued as he seated himself at the table and began to arrange the

THE REPORT ON IMMIGRATION

Outline of the Recommendation of the Government's Commissioner—Co-operation Essential

The report on immigration by Mr. Arthur Hawkes, who was appointed a Special Commissioner by the Hon. Robt. Rogers, Minister of the Interior, to propose measures of co-operation between the Dominion and Provincial Governments contains a scheme of reorganization of the Immigration Department involving the establishment of a Central Board at Ottawa, the erection of distinct provincial immigration services, and an enlargement of the Department's propaganda in Britain.

"Immigration to Canada," says the report, "is the crucial economic factor in the progress of the Dominion. Every financial responsibility that has been assumed for the devolpment of Canada, whether in pledging public credit for railways, or for civic expansion, or for industrial enterprises, has been assumed in expectation of a greater increase of population than the natural increase. With capital pouring in, chiefly from Britain it is easy to confuse the prosperity that arises from expenditure which represents an obligation to pay interest, with the permanent prosperity that comes from increase of production from Canadian soil, mines, forests and waters.

"Continuous immigration to keep pace with, and get ahead of continuous inflow of capital is, therefore a fundamental constructive necessity of government.

"The function of the Dominion is to demonstrate that the interests of the provinces are not anagonistic but complementary. A scheme is required by which the provinces will uphold the major responsibility where the provincial interest is primary, and the Dominion will carry the major responsibility where the credit and effect of Canada as a whole are the paramount concern. It is necessary to find some way of combining these two main responsibilities under one general administration

Four Conclusions

"From a discussion of the basic conditions that affect Canadian immigration, four conclusions clearly emerge:

1. That immigration must be secured and directed for the immediate production of commodities from Canadian natural resources, as distinct from, and more necessary than, its employment for the expenditure of capital brought in from outside.

2. That plans for placing and employing new population in each province should be made and primarily carried out on provincial bases, in sympathetic conjunction with the Dominion; without regard to the liklihood of political accidents.

3. That the Dominion should readapt its machinery for obtaining immigrants with a view to securing the utmost degree of permanence in the stream of immigration and the most equal distribution of it, in accordance with the requirements of each province.

4. That it is imperative in view of changed conditions in Canada and Britain, and in order to take the greatest possible advantage of the pro-Canadian sentiment prevailing in the United Kingdom, to give the most expert attention to the conditions which underlie, and ultimately govern emigration from the United Kingdom.

Settlement Organization

"Inquiry into and comparison of views of Ministers and public-spirited citizens in all the provinces leads to the proposal that in each province there should be an immigration and land settlement organization whose executive head shall be the constant medium of co-operation with the dominion. Such an organization would be responsible for the following operations:

"a. Collecting data intended to attract settlement.

"b. Enlisting the systematic help of public-spirited bodies such as Boards of Trade and Imperial Home Reunion Associations in the placing of people in their own localities.

"c. Working out plans for the settlement of special localities with the aid of capital secured at low rates of interest primarily on the public credit.

"d. Receiving and distributing immigration of all kinds.

"e. Promoting semi-public agencies for the special service of new and sparsely peopled districts.

Dominion and Immigration Board

"The end to be reached is, fundamentally, as important as that of the Railway Commission; and may well be reached through a Board constituted with as much care as the Railway Commission is, answerable to Parliament through the Minister, with wide responsibility thoroughly defined.

"The Board would consist of a Chairman, who would be the chief executive officer; the Superintendent of Immigration, the Commissioner of Immigration in charge of the West, a nominee of the Minister of Finance, and a representative of each province, agreeable to the Provincial Government, who would be the principal local executive officer in the province, but paid by the Dominion.

"The Minister of the Interior would be the President of the Board, and would preside at such meetings as he found it convenient to attend. The Board would decide the general rules of policy, subject to confirmation by the Minister or Order-in-Council, and its participation in each provincial work would be delegated to a Committee, consisting of the Chairman, the Superintendent of Immigration, and the provincial member; which would act with such provincial body as might be constituted. Each province would make its own local machinery, constructed on a general plan for all the provinces, for handling land settlement, the distribution of labor and other matters with reports through a Minister to the Governor in Council, as well as to the Dominion Board."

One way to Get Around the High-priced Meat Question

Scores of stray dogs were slaughtered at Halle, Germany, and the meat sold to the public in the city market. There was a rush to obtain the canine "steaks" and "chops" as if they were a great delicacy.

The city authorities ordered the butchering of the animals, which had been gathered up for a month. It is Tells How to Cure Quickly.

"Even when I was young I was not robust and healthy like other girls. I suffered from headaches, and had sort of blue feelings that deprived me of the joyful spirits and pleasures other girls seemed to get. After I married I found I could not throw worries off like other women, and those full feelings of despondency and weariness made me very unhappy. There was no cause to feel so, and my doctor said my liver was sluggish, and this accounted for my poor color, my tiredness, langor and despair. The pills the doctor gave me were too purgative, made me weaker because they were too active for my constitution. Dozens of my friends recommended Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and they were so mild and helpful. Well, I never used a pill that acted so quietly as Dr. Hamilton's They were so comfortable to use, I was afraid they might not help. But in a week I knew they had been actively engaged in clearing up my system. They did the work of a tonic and blood medicine combined. I improved to a marvelous degree with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and I now maintain the most perfect kind of health by using them just once or twice a week."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Every Weak Throat Quickly Strengthened And Bronchitis Cured

Grand Results Follow the Direct Breathing Remedy, Which Cures Without Drugging.

The country is fairly wild over the wonderful recovery that throat sufferers are making every day with Catarrhozone. From ocean to ocean come letters telling of rapid cures—and cures when the complaint was chronic and long standing. It's a brand new principle upon which Catarrhozone works—not a single dose of medicine to take—nothing to upset the stomach or spoil digestion.

You can breathe through the Catarrhozone Inhaler medicated air that is full of healing, soothing balsams, full of piney antiseptic essences that resemble the air of the pine woods in the Adirondacks. The piney vapor has a truly marvelous action on weak throats. It brings strength and health to the bronchitic, stops that hacking, irritating cough, prevents hoarseness and difficult breathing. You can't find anything for weak-throated people on earth more beneficial than Catarrhozone. It means heaven on earth to the man that has had bronchitis, catarrh or throat irritation. You will realize this the first time you use Catarrhozone, which is a scientific preparation specially designed for diseases of the nose, throat and bronchial tubes. Get the large size, it lasts two months, costs $1.00; medium size, 50c.; sample size, 25c. All storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

THIS IS CIRCUS DAY

All roads led to the circus grounds yesterday where the great Barnum and Bailey circus rested in as much of a condition of ease as is ever possible with an organization of like character. Four long trains of 85 cars brought the circus to Peterboro over the Grand Trunk from Lindsay, where performances were given Saturday, and long before the average breakfast had been cleared away the huge organization was installed upon the show grounds, where thousands visited it yesterday intent upon seeing what they could of the affair, upon its one day of semi-rest. Only necessary work looking to the comfort and well-being of the people, horses and animals with the circus was done. The erection of the "big top" and other labor going over until this morning. Those who saw the circus "at rest" yesterday gained a full idea of its immensity and marvelled at the disciplined organization of employees who make possible the mobility of such a tremendous affair. No untoward incidents occurred at the grounds to mar the day and favorable comments were heard upon every hand. The horse tents, dining tents, menagerie and other adjuncts of the circus were objects of interest and throngs of people coming and going until early evening.

The street parade will leave the grounds at 10 o'clock this morning and cover the principle streets. It will be some two miles in length and exhibit, as perhaps nothing else could the immense resources enjoyed by this largest of travelling circuses now making its farewell Canadian tour prior to a long winter season in London, England. Hundreds of horses will be in line; five bands of music including a woman's brass band; over a score of elephants; two droves of camels; floats and chariots emblematic of many countries and legends; mounted men and women; All these and much more of interest including many open cages of wild animal life will go to make up the colorful pageant.

Performances will be given at 2 and 8 o'clock, both performances being given in complete manner. The spectacle "Cleopatra" opens the program. Over 1000 persons take part and there is a large ballet. The story of Antony's undoing and the tragic death of Egypt's beautiful queen is vividly portrayed in a series of magnificent ensembles and tableaux, and the story effectively mixed by a large cast, introducing Eugene Gilbon, in the character of Cleopatra and Camille Fortuni, as Antony. Over 2000 costumes are utilized and elephants, camels and other animals are used in the stupendous play.

Following the spectacle come the arenic members, many of which are being seen for the first time in America.

A branch ticket office will be established at W. J. Kent Drug Store, where tickets may be bought at no advance in price.

Six Million—Dollars

Six Million Dollars has already been spent on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad shops across the street from CENTRAL PARK, Transcona. Will you invest your savings where the railroads have invested millions? No one questions the desirability of owning Transcona Real Estate — to buy and hold is to amass wealth — if you buy where the industrial development insures the future of your property. CENTRAL PARK is in the centre of Transcona's greatest development and is nearer the centre of the incorporated town than any other Transcona property on the market. CENTRAL PARK is first in line for water and sewer as soon as permission is obtained to use the Grand Trunk Pacific trunk sewer which passes through this property. All other improvements are right at hand.

CENTRAL PARK faces the Grand Trunk Pacific shops and station, and is bounded on the north by the main road to Winnipeg; the main road to St. Boniface on the south; and King Street, which runs the full length of the property on the east, is the only access to the station, and the only street from the north to the south of the shops. All traffic to and from Transcona must pass CENTRAL PARK. The location of CENTRAL PARK is ideal for manufacturers or warehouses, as the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific runs through the south end of CENTRAL PARK, affording good trackage. CENTRAL PARK is without doubt the cream of Transcona's industrial property, the most conservative real estate dealers agree on this. This property is also strongly endorsed by the owners of the original townsite of Transcona.

CENTRAL—PARK

One of our Salesmen made $232.50 in commissions last week. We want some salesmen to do this in the east, write to us for particulars and literature, CENTRAL PARK has the location, and we know that if it is properly shown to investors that anyone can sell and make this much money till the property is all gone. Write today — right now — for more information. This property has only been on the market two weeks, and already several buildings have been started here. All is activity in this vicinity; poles are ready to carry electric power through CENTRAL PARK; this power is used exclusively in the Grand Trunk shops and is the cheapest power on the American continent. It will be supplied in Transcona at the same price as it is now supplied in Winnipeg.

Three great Transcontinental Railroads are behind Transcona's future. $20,000,000 already expended and under contract in industrial development in Transcona. Two of the largest grain elevators in the world will be erected in Transcona. These industries are all guarantees of the future of Transcona, where there are a thousand men employed now, five thousand will be employed in a year's time. This means that real estate will be worth five times as much as it is now, it is the increase in population that makes real estate values rise, and Transcona's industries when completed, will double the present population ten times over. Now is the time to buy, CENTRAL PARK prices are lower than is being received for property outside the town limits. Prices range from $200 per lot. Easy terms.

INDIGESTION—(Part 1)—No other work in the entire medical dictionary covers the starting point of so many ailments, sickness, sufferings or deaths, as the one word, indigestion. Next to it and a very close second comes its first cousin, constipation. Forever eliminate those two conditions and you would practically eliminate disease or sickness of all kinds. Stop and think a little, have I not stated a simple and practical truth? You know what that I have and you know also that when a person says that he has perfect health, except that he is occasionally troubled a bit with indigestion and frequently with constipation, that it's not going to be long before he will also be complaining about a twinge of rheumatism or a bad cold, followed by catarrh, or some other difficulty that seems to be the common fate of humanity.

Too much food, eating too often, improper mastication, wrong combinations of food and the habit of drinking while eating, are the most common causes of indigestion. By far the most common of all these is over eating and next under-chewing.

Not long ago I invited a prominent professional man to come and eat with me. He has frequently complained of heart trouble. He weighs about 50 pounds more than he should. His skin is in bad condition and if it is at any time slightly broken, does not readily heal. He is noted as a brilliant conversationalist and for the most excellent table spread at his own home. The food which we serve is good, wholesome and well prepared, nothing fancy. In spite of the fact that he kept up a constant conversation, his portion was consumed long before any one else was half through. Then he began upon bread and butter, a large dish of fruit sauce and a dish of nuts. I think he would have eaten the entire supply intended for seven people if some one had not asked that they be passed.

He kept eating until the rest finished and then ate with the rest, a generous dessert of strawberry short cake with whipped cream. The nut bowls were refilled and while we sat talking for an hour, he ate nuts almost constantly. Now you may call him a pig or a glutton if you like, but I frequently see far worse cases, and, like him, the offenders stoutly maintain that their stomach never troubles them in the least. I know better. Every particle of pain and suffering which that man endures, comes from indigestion, over-eating, under-chewing. Some day I expect to receive word of his very sudden death, although the papers announcing it will say that he was apparently in the very best of health.

CLUB NOTES.

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5039 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago. Send full name and address with 4 cents postage.

Dear Doctor—Is distilled water for drinking, better than filtered city water reasonably pure, or that which has been boiled? When I get a cold I have sore throat for three days and then begin to sneeze and blow. Can you suggest anything that will cut it off at the sore throat stage. I have tried antiseptic gargles. H.R.R.

Where the drinking water does not contain too much mineral matter and is reasonably pure, it is better for ordinary use than distilled water. By boiling, it can of course, be made perfectly safe. Frequent colds indicate that the system is loaded with a great deal of impurities and poisons which are continually being formed in the body and which are not being eliminated as fast as they should be. The sore throat stage mentioned above is a symptom of this self-poisoning. It is to be prevented by regulation of diet and hygiene, including practicing deep breathing exercises. Constipation must be absolutely avoided: use a diet sufficiently laxative and take plenty of water daily, 3 to 5 pints at least for a time between meals.

Dear Doctor: In a recent issue you spoke of the Compound Gentian treatment according to the Thompsonian formula. Would you please send me formula, and about what should a druggist charge to fill the prescription? Would this be good for a debilitated condition of the nerves and kindred ailments. Would be pleased to hear from you. J.W.M.

The formula for Compound Gentian which has often been given in these notes is here repeated for the benefit of those who failed to make a note of it.

Golden seal	2 ounces.
Balmony	2 ounces.
Dwarf elder	2 ounces.
Gentian	1 ounce.
Prickly ash	1 ounce.
Wahoo	1 ounce.

The above quantities will make one quart of syrup according to the directions for making syrups, and should be taken in doses of two teaspoonfuls after each meal. The price at which you will be able to obtain the dry herbs will vary a great deal. One of the ingredients is quite high priced. It is often just as cheap and much more convenient to obtain it in tablet form. The Compound Gentian is helpful in cases of nervous weakness, but addition measures are necessary. Freedom from heavy work, mental or physical, from worry and excitement is imperative. Change of climate and surroundings is often successfully resorted to. No two cases are entirely alike, hence there is no remedy nor treatment that will be of the same benefit to all. Give me full data and I will gladly suggest home treatment.

Dear Doctor: I never was bothered with chapped hands until recently, then my hands chapped and cracked badly. The cracking kept moving until it is now on the knuckles, and the cracks are larger. What causes it, and what shall I do? H.J.

I would suggest that you secure 2 oz. of commercial acetic acid, 2 oz. glycerine and 2 oz. of witch-hazel. Mix thoroughly and after washing the hands in warm water and castile soap at night, rinsing them with clean water, and drying carefully, apply the above mixture. This is an excellent preparation for the face, also, if the skin is inclined to be dry and hard.

BRITISH PRECEDENT SUPPORTS PLAN FOLLOWED BY PREMIER

Point Raised by Liberals That Naval Aid Bill Was Unconstitutional Completely Quashed by Precedent of English Government. Following Same Method of Financing as Proposed

Ottawa, June 33.—One of the complaints which the Liberals are busy urging against Mr. Borden's Naval Aid Bill is the allegation that it is unconstitutional. The argument is that it will take two or three years to spend the thirty-five million dollars, and that it is against the rules to vote it in a lump sum. The only trouble with this constitutional point is that it is wrong. When ever it suits Parliament to authorize a complete and well-rounded out scheme the execution of which must be spread over a term of years, it is quite in order to make the entire appropriation of money in the enabling Act. English precedents are conclusive on the point.

Btitish Naval Defence Aid.

In 1889 the British Parliament passed the Naval Defence Act. This was a very important piece of legislation, due to the alarm which it then had to discharge. The Act directed the building of no less than 70 war-ships—ten battleships, nine first-class cruisers, twenty-nine second class cruisers, and a swarm of smaller craft. These vessels were to be completed in a period of five years. More than half of them were to be built by the Government itself in the Royal dockyards, and nearly half were to be built by contract in private ship-yards. The Act stated that the cost was to be £21,500,000.

Voted in Lump Sum.

Notice now how this money was provided. The dockyard built ships were to cost £11,500,000, and this money was to be provided year by year by vote of Parliament, exactly as the Canadian Liberals this year have been urging that the money for the Canadian Dreadnoughts should be voted annually. But with regard to the contract-built ships the British Parliament of 1889 absolutely disregarded this principle. It formed a fund of £10,000,000, and it directed that this fund was to be expended in a certain number of annual instalments. The First Lord of the Admiralty, Lord George Hamilton, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Goschen, explained this fully and said that the reason for taking this steps was that it was desirable to carry the entire program through without alteration. The Liberals objected in a somewhat half-hearted manner to this method of financing and were beaten on division.

Thus when the British Parliament desired to make a special effort to strengthen the navy it pursued the exact financial course followed by Mr. Borden.

Liberal Government's Plan.

In 1909 the Liberal Government at present in power in Great Britain put through Parliament a measure generally known as the Development Act. It is designed to give government aid by means of grants and loans to assist in the building of good roads, the development of forestry, the encouragement of agriculture, the building of canals, etc., and the method of aid selected is the formation of a fund from which various enterprises can receive monetary assistance. The fund was to be formed by a series of five annual votes each of £500,000, that is to say, Parliament in 1909 not only put through a vote of £500,000 for this purpose, but ordained that each year for four successive years a similar vote was to be passed. This was binding future Parliaments to vote money without discussion. Half a dozen members of Parliament objected but the bulk of the Conservatives and the whole of the Liberal party voted against the proposal to condemn this method of financing a big proposition.

Thus we see that a Conservative Parliament in 1889 and a Liberal Parliament in 1909 took exactly the course which Mr. Borden has pursued and which the Liberal wise-acres of Canada are declaring to be unconstitutional.

"BANKS MUST BE INSTRUMENTS --NOT MASTERS OF BUSINESS"

This is the Keynote of President Wilson's Speech to Congress Today on Currency Bill--Laws to Prevent Concentration of Money in a Few Hands

Washington, June 23.—Congress heard from President Wilson again to-day. For the second time the executive told the members in joint assemblage what he considered their duty to the nation. And, as on the occasion of his first appearance on this mission, the President told his hearers that their personal feelings had no bearing on the case; that the country demanded action on currency reform, and that the emergency was so great that Congress to-day rested the responsibility of success or failure of the nation's business during the coming four years.

There was little difference between to-day's proceedings and those of several weeks ago, when the President, throwing precedent to the wind, read his tariff message in person. There was the same crowd in the galleries, the same formal entry into the House chamber of the Senate. But there was a decided change in the manner of the executive. He was more confident. The slight appearance of nervousness that marked him then was absent to-day.

The President came down from the White House in his automobile, accompanied by his secretary, and proceeded at once to the room of Speaker Clark to wait for the committee that was to escort him to the Speaker's stand. To those who accompanied him he explained that he was only urging action to-day; that he was simply stating, for the benefit of Congress, the situation in the nation and the reason why the proposed legislation is required. Later when the Wilson-Glass bill is formally introduced, he will confer with the members of both branches, and will do everything in his power to force the bill through.

LONDON ISSUES WARNING TO THE CANADIAN CITIES

London, June 23.—Judging by to-day's cables there seems to have been some excitement, especially in Winnipeg, over the recent statements in London regarding the financial standing of Canadian municipalities. The indignation which is said to exist has evidently been aroused through Horne Payne's speech. The Canadian Associated Press, however, is unable to learn of any attempt by Canadian railway, bank, and commercial interests here to boycott Canadian municipal securities. Horne Payne's statements are regarded here as quite singular and biased. There is, however, a very general feeling in the London market among Canada's best friends, that Canadian cities, generally and, certain ones in particular, should, for a time at any rate, limit their commitments to [illegible] necessary undertakings. It [illegible] be invidious to mention names but there's not the least doubt two Canadian cities of secondary rank have created a larger floating indebtedness than any city in the Empire outside Britain. All the same, it is the fact that London practically has never lost money by investments in municipal securities, and there is no Canadian city to-day in the opinion of those in London, best qualified to know which is not perfectly good for its obligations. They must, however, take the future into account, and if certain cities do not exercise greater care both as regards amount and method, they will certainly bring trouble on themselves and on the whole situation.

Horne Payne's orations, it may be added, don't always carry much weight, although his ability is unquestioned.

TO CHICAGO BY OX-TEAM.

Chicago, June 23.—Frederick William Brookes, who came from New York to Chicago by ox-team in 1833, died here to-day, aged 86. He was one of the city's first printers and "worked at the case' with the late "Long John" Wentworth, afterwards Mayor, who was editor of The Chicago Democrat.

The Annual Excursion and Picnic of the Mark Street and Salem Sunday Schools will take place to Gore's Landing, on Tuesday, June 24, per steamer Esturion. Return tickets, 50 cents; children 25c. All are welcome.

MILITANTS TRY TO WRECK FAST TRAIN

Obstacle Placed in Tunnel Near Devonport Removed in the Nick of Time.

London, June 23.—What is suspected to have been a militant suffragette attempt to wreck an express train from London to Plymouth in a tunnel near Devonport on Saturday, is reported to-day. A motor belonging to the London and Southwestern Railway while proceeding through the tunnel along the rails, came in contact with a heavy obstacle. The motorman made a search and discovered two heavy sleepers wedged between the metals over which the express train was due to pass. The sleepers were removed just as the long train thundered through the tunnel.

CHARGE THREE WITH ATTEMPTED MURDER

Men Who Shot Quebec Detective, Who Recovered, Already in Jail Serving Term.

Quebec, Que., June 23.—An accusation of attempted murder was laid to-day against Jean Foisy, Raoul Demers and Jeanette Lecourt, who are each serving a six months' sentence in the Quebec Jail for robbery. On April 5th, when Detective Trudel went to arrest the trio in the woods near Lake St. Joseph, twenty miles north of Quebec. Demers fired two revolver shots at him. Trudel remained in the hospital for two months and has now recovered.

OUR SOLDIER BOYS NOW AT PETEWAWA

Petewawa, June 20,

"All is quiet on the Potomac," very aptly describes the prevailing conditions in camp, if you substitute the word Ottawa for Potomac. The absence of the canteen is in a large measure responsible for the gentlemanly decorum of the camp. The summer tourist at Stoney Lake would consider this outing "tame" if he were placed under similar restrictions. The drill seems to be interesting to the recruits, judging from their eagerness to participate in all parades and manoeuvres. To-morrow A and B squadrons of the 3rd Dragoons go to the ranges for target practice. It is needless to say the present targets will have to be replaced by new ones before further operations of this nature can be executed. They'll be riddled. Lieut. W. E. Edmison, M.D., and Surgeon-Major Douglas left camp for home last night. A trooper of D squadron goes home to Wellington tonight whither he has been summoned by telegram to the death of his son. The boy was ailing, but went down to the station to see his father off to camp, but became worse and died a few days after the Dragoons arrived here.

Major T. J. Johnston, 2nd in command, of the 3rd Dragoons, is acting Quartermaster, owing to the absence position of Capt. Smith and Quartermaster-Sergt. James of Bowmanville is filling the position formerly held by Sergt. H. Blakely. Pay Sergt. R. G. Johnston is again acting as Paymaster this year for the Dragoons.

Sergt. R. Biggs is acting as Brigade Quartermaster Sergt. for the 10th Brigade, Canadian Field Artillery. Everybody regrets the absence of "Col." Jimmy Foster in camp, particularly Col. Fisher and the other members of the Battery. Come again next year, Colonel!

Weather, cool and pleasant.

R. G. JOHNSTON.

A TRIP TO THE UPPER WATERS OF TRENT CANAL

A party composed of Supt. McClellan, E. G. Paterson and W. H. Denham representing the Trent Valley Power Association and Mr. J. H. Burnham went north recently to explore the water reservoirs of the Trent Canal. They went as far as the entrance to Lake Bushkung in the County of Haliburton. Apparently there is a large body of water which will even in this dry season afford means of a steady flow for the rest of the season. Last year, there was a tremendous flow of water in the spring which was not well conserved and there was low water when least expected but this year there has been an improvement. The new dams which are being placed in position are concrete and tight and do not allow of the waste of water which used to go on continually under the dams. Although handling water especially where logs come out is a delicate matter still it can be done and when the logs are all gone it will be a matter of almost mathematical certainty to produce a steady flow throughout the season. The party went to Buckhorn and saw the new dam at Scott's Mills controlling the Mississauga Creek which drains a large area in the interior. In the smaller streams far back the water is as clear as if it came from the mountain snow. The party then by motor went across Squaw river and Nogies' Creek to Bobcaygeon where it was seen that Sturgeon Lake was full. The party then cut across to Fenelon Falls where the waters of Cameron Lake were also up to high water mark. They then journeyed north to Kinmount from which they set out the following morning at a very early hour and visited Minden. The waters of Gull River were flowing at the ordinary level. Horseshoe Lake was full, as was 12 Mile Lake, although the latter gave signs of exhaustion. Above these lakes and on each side are Hall Lake, Genesee Lake and several others, but as they would have to be visited by portage and canoe it would require several days more. The party was assured however, that these lakes were well supplied.

Coming down the Gull River waters Gull River was found to be flowing fairly well into Balsam Lake, as was also Burnt River, which is a small river some ten or twelve miles to the east flowing into Cameron Lake from the Village of Haliburton side. The northern source of the Trent is in Dorset township, which is some fifteen miles farther on than the party went.

The only way to see in what condition the Trent waters are from time to time is to visit them. The improvement of late years and facilities for the handling of the water has been very great and as the logs disappear and concrete dams are built, will be greater. When it is understood that the flow of the Trent through Peterborough is as high in the spring as 450,000 cubic feet a minute, which continues with small variations till possibly the 1st of May, afterwards falls by reason of being held back to from 130,000 to 110,000 cubic feet, it will be realized how much it may be done to increase the average flow.

As the use of power increases the question of supply of power becomes a paramount one for the Trent district, and it will require all the energies of the people and the Government to work it out successfully. The water is there, fortunately. It is a question of energy and push. Heretofore, especially in its earlier stages, the Trent Canal, like a great many other things, was made just a means to an end, but if a success is to be made of it, it must be by means of cutting out politics as far as possible and putting in brains instead. This whole district would have been left millions of dollars better off from waste alone if "the interests" had not had such complete control over, if the people had put a little more common sense into the matter as well.

IMAGINED HE WAS ON TITANIC

Kingston, June 23.—Herman Oderberg, one of the survivors of the Titanic disaster, took a fit on a Thousand Island steamer yesterday and imagined he was on the Titanic again. It was with difficulty that he was restrained from jumping over board.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Southerly winds; fine and warm.

CANADA IS WORLD'S GARDEN SAYS THE BISHOP OF LONDON

"The God-Given Cure for Overcrowded England, But not for the Wastrels"--The Chances in British Columbia

London, June 23.—The Bishop of London, speaking at the Mansion House to-day, said he believed the Anglican Church may have started too late in North-West Canada, but he believed they were not being too late in British Columbia.

"Canada," he declared, "is the garden of the world, and is absolutely the God-given cure for our own overcrowded population, not for wastrels but for that great cheerful mass who would be splendid folk if only given a chance. If the Church and home during the next fifty years did its duty, Canada would become the most God-fearing nation the world has ever known."

By the terms of the will of a widow who died recently in Sicily the first woman to be elected to the Italian Parliament will receive $4000.

EGGS FOR SUFFRAGETTES

London, June 23.—Eggs, raw and hurled from a distance, was the menu served up to the suffragettes marching from Land's End to London when they reached Canbourne on Saturday. Ten thousand people waited to pelt the women with eggs, and after the shower was administered the van containing speakers was rushed up a side street and overturned.

If Miss Helen Slinghuff, of Norrisburg, Pa., remains single she will receive $25,000 left by her mother, but if she marries the money is to be divided equally between her brother, her sister, and herself.

The bridegroom doesn't amount to much at the wedding ceremony—but wait until July.

BOY VICTIMS NIAGARA RIVER ARE STILL WITHIN THE POOL

All Efforts at Rescue of Hubert Moore and Donald Roscoe Are Unavailing

Niagara Falls, N.Y., June 23.—Thus far all efforts to recover the bodies of Hubert Moore, 9 years old and Donald Roscoe, 12 years old, the two boys who were swept to their death when a small boat in which they had been playing was carried through the whirlpool rapids yesterday afternoon, have proved unavailing. Practically all last evening and again this morning friends of the families have stood guard at the whirlpool in the hope that the bodies would be washed up and could be made fast. Venturesome men have risked their lives in the boat in which the boys were carried into the rapids in the hope that they might see the bodies churned up by the currents of the great maelstrom, but they have found nothing.

With Elliott Thompson, 14 years old, of No. 456 Elmwood avenue, Hubert Moore, who was the son of a widow, living at 628 Elmwood avenue, and Donald, son of William Roscoe, miller, of 710 Ashland avenue, were playing in the boat which belonged to John Briggs, a squatter, who built a small cabin at the foot of the bank last winter. The boat was chained to the shore, and they would push it out into the river to the length of the chain. They had been playing thus for half an hour or so when the chain broke and the boat drifted out into the river.

Drifting Toward Certain Death.

The cabin is some 300 feet above "Swift Drift," the head of the whirlpool rapids, and like Mr. and Mrs. Stanton and Burrell Heacock, the ice-bridge victims, the three boys began to drift toward the rapids and certain death.

They had no oars and there was nothing in the boat with which they might paddle toward the shore. After the boat had drifted thirty or forty feet from the shore Thompson jumped into the river and swam ashore.

There was no one within the sound of his voice and his cries and those of the other children were drowned by the roar of the falls on the one side and the rapids toward which they were drifting on the other.

MOTHER PUT CHILDREN TO BED WITH A RATTLESTAKE

In the Morning She Found Them Dead---Snake Had Crept In When Blankets Were Left on Grass for Airing

Beach, N.D., June 23.—Two children were killed by a rattlesnake which had become concealed in the bed clothing at the home of Dave Grant, 14 miles south-west of here, Sunday night.

During the day the bed clothing had been left in the grass for airing. The children, aged 5 and 7, were put to bed by their mother, and within a few minutes began fighting among themselves, each accusing the other of "pinching."

The mother visited the room, and tucked the bed clothes about her children, and retired for the night.

Next morning both children were found dead and the snake was lying between them.

AWNING ABLAZE

At 12.30 midnight, an alarm was sent in from Box 23, last night when the awning in front of the Nugent Drug Store, was ablaze. The Brigade were on the job just about as quick as it could possibly get there and about two and a half squirts from a chemical put the blaze out. No damage was done.

AUTO THIEF ESCAPES "GUEST" MAY NOT LIVE

Motor Stolen During Blaze Wrecked—Injured Man is Found Under the Car.

Quincy, Mass., June 23.—Beneath an automobile overturned in a ditch in Braintree, a trolley car conductor early to-day found the body of Alton Tripp, 21 years old, and lying nearby his companion, Daniel Dowling, in a semi-conscious condition. The automobile was one of two which had been stolen during the night from an Nantasket garage while a fire was in progress.

According to Dowling, who is on the dangerous list at the Quincy hospital with a fractured skull, he and Tripp were at a hotel in Nantasket when invited by a stranger to ride in the automobile. The driver of the car the man supposed to have stolen it, is believed to have escaped uninjured when the car overturned.

SANK TO DEATH FROM ROWBOAT AT SUNNYSIDE

Companion Was Helpless to Effect a Rescue of Frank Bremner--Body Not Yet Recovered

Toronto, June 23.—Standing up in a rowboat on the lake opposite Sunnyside yesterday afternoon, Frank Bremmer, of 142 Northcote avenue, lost his balance and falling into the water, was drowned. His companion Alexander Murdoch, of the same address, was unable to make any effort to save Bremner, as the unfortunate man sank immediately he struck the water, and did not reappear at the surface.

The two men had started out for a row from Dean's boathouse shortly after noon, and Bremner becoming cramped, stood up in the boat to relieve himself when he suddenly toppled and fell over the side before his companion could assist him. Malt Ackroyd and a number of friends dragged for the body for some hours but failed to recover it.

The deceased has no relatives in Canada, but his friends in Scotland have been notified.

CHOKED BY FALSE TEETH.

BERLIN DEFEATED PETES IN A FAST EXHIBITION OF BALL

Quite a large number of fans were present yesterday at Riverside Park to witness the game between Berlin and the Petes. The game was a fast one from start to finish and right up till the finish it was anybody's game and the crowd were kept on edge all the time.

The Petes opened the scoring in the first innings. Brant reaching the plate, and then the gates closed until the seventh, when the visitors tallied one run, coming back again in the eighth and getting one more on an error by Sargeant, who dropped a red hot grounder, letting in the winning run.

During the progress of the game some good hitting was done by both nines, and many brilliant plays were pulled off. A feature of the game being the fast fielding of Hilliard and Chapdelaine, while Peggy in the sawdust and ashes bed in left field, did all that could be expected in that quarter. Trout played his usual good game, and kept the boys working hard all through.

The batteries for Berlin Bramble and Beltzer; for Petes, Belting and Trout.

Don't forget the Typos B.B.C. Moonlight to-morrow night, down the river, per steamer Stoney Lake. This promises to be the event of the season. Good orchestra, dancing, refreshments, etc. Get in with the boys for a good time. Tickets 25c from any printer.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 326 George St., directly opposite Greenman's store.

REST IS NECESSARY FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Every Woman Should Relax at Intervals During Busiest Day

Repose settles very gracefully upon a housewife. The other members of the family do not always come home with the spirit of helpfulness and cheerfulness, and when a woman finds it necessary to be the pacifer or the encourager it will be a time for her to call upon her reserve power of strength. She therefore needs to store up energy for the unexpected, because emergencies are always having to be met in the household. If she does not plan for the unusual, the unusual is likely to be the "straw that breaks the camel's back." The wise woman will not fail to take a few minutes for rest several times during even her busiest and most taxing day. Indeed, it is on just such a day that she most needs to practise the beneficial gospel of relaxation. To relax—to let go the nerve, brain and muscle strain—for even sixty seconds is a positive gain to the entire system. Complete relaxation and thorough rest are most easily obtained by lying down and unreservedly yielding the support of the body to the couch. Thus to spend five or ten minutes in the middle of each day would enable many a worn and weary houseworker to accomplish more, with less fatigue than is otherwise possible. The foregoing suggestion is so remote from what many an industrious woman considers "her duty to her family as to seem to her like theoretical nonsense. Nevertheless, it is body and brain saving, good common sense. Duty to one's self should lead women to take measures for saving health and strength while there is still a fund to draw upon.

Rest periods of fifteen minutes at intervals during the day are much to be desired in the housekeeper's program, and they should be taken before she has become so weary that fifteen minutes do not seem to count. A hard working professional man was asked how often he rested. He replied, as often as he had fifteen minutes to spare. Women do not rest often enough before they are utterly exhausted. Sometimes it seems easier to continue working than to stop, because the first experiences in resting are most uncomfortable; one dreads the let-down after utter exhaustion. Moreover, young housekeepers full of life and energy are tempted to work beyond their strength without planning for the reserve necessary for later years.

CARE OF THE FEET

Prevention Better Than Cure of Ingrowing Nails

An ingrowing toenail is very painful and often requires surgical attention for the simple reason that people are inclined to think of it as "only an ingrowing toenail."

The first sign of this trouble is soreness in the flesh beside the nail. The skin becomes very much inflamed. The nail presses down into the flesh and the sufferer experiences great inconvenience in walking or even wearing a shoe. This condition does not come all at once, however, and might usually be prevented if the individual attended to the nail as soon as the first symptom of soreness manifested itself.

Improper footwear is the commonest cause of ingrowing toenail. Shoes too narrow across the toes, or not long enough, or those with high heels which throw the toes forward so that they are crowded by the toe of the shoe are all first aids.

A wrong method of cutting the toe nails may start the trouble. Toenails should be cut straight across, not trimmed away at the corners to follow the lines of the toes. If the latter method is used the flesh crowds in at the corners, and as the nail pushes forward it digs into the flesh.

The treatment for ingrowing toenails includes the wearing of broad toed shoes; relieving pain and inflammation by the use of hot poultices of flaxseed meal or other soothing material; soaking the foot frequently in hot water.

If the condition is discovered early, push a very small bit of cotton batting under the side of the nail and keep the top of the nail cut very short.

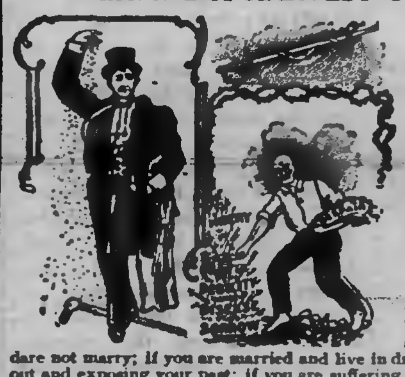
A TREE OF MIGNONETTE

A plant of the fragrant mignonette may be preserved from year to year, and it takes on the proportions of a little tree.

Take a good healthy plant that has grown from seeds sown in the month of April, keep it in a flower pot, and whenever it attempts to show a blossom, nip it off remorselessly.

At the end of September, or the beginning of October, cut off all the bottom shoots to make it look like a tree; move it into a larger pot, and put it in the greenhouse. Water it regularly and keep it moderately warm.

Treat it in this same way the following year, cutting off all the lower shoots and blossoms, and you will have a mignonette tree that will last and bloom for years.



SOWING HIS WILD OATS
REAPING A HARVEST OF SORROW

How many young men can look back on their early life and regret their misdeeds. "Sowing their wild oats" in various ways. Excesses, violation of nature's laws, "wine, women and song"—all have their victims. You have reformed but what about the seed you have sown—what about the harvest? Don't trust to luck. If you are at present within the clutches of any secret habit which is sapping your life by degrees; if you are suffering from the results of past indiscretions; if your blood has been tainted from any private disease and you dare not marry; if you are married and live in dread of symptoms breaking out and exposing your past; if you are suffering as the result of a misspent life—DRS. AN UNKNOWN KING

In a gloomy niche half way down Westminster Hall there is dimly to be descried a gray stone statue of a king which recently was taken out of the Architectural Museum and placed in its present position. There is a heavy crown on his head over long flowing hair. The beard is rippled and majestic. In his left hand he holds the orb, but the sceptre hand is gone. The old king broods over the hall of kings.

The experts are puzzled over his history. He stood in Westminster Hall for many centuries side by side with other stone kings and all were tidied away by the Government in 1856. Lately it occurred to Lord Beauchamp to try the effect of bringing them back. Several of the beautiful Gothic windows are blind, forming niches suitable for statues, and all the old forgotten kings may take their places in them.

This first one is a beautiful personage. No one knows what king he is or whether it is merely an ideal figure of majesty, but it is certain that he is the work of some fine fourteenth century craftsman.

The battered king is the grandest statue in the hall. Below him lie in ghostly row the kings done with the petty realism of the modern age; immediately under his blind Majesty's gaze is the broad face, cynically furrowed, of the merry monarch. The unknown king towers over these people like a visitant from ampler times.

We are pained to note that Jacob Schefer, of Chicago, choked to death on a tooth the became loosened during a speel of laughter caused by a newspaper joke. The incident reminds us that we once read in a Sunday school book about a little boy who, while laughing at an old man whose legs were paralyzed, was stricken with blindness. Moral: Respect old age and do not laugh at the ancient and decrepit newspaper joke.

CANNOT FIX THE PRICE

Recently the Supreme Court at Washington gave judgment in a case which is of more than ordinary interest to the general public. The immediate case in dispute referred to a newly-patented nerve tonic, in regard to which the manufacturer, in placing it on the market, had settled the price. The court decided that this could not be legally done, and that when a retailer buys an article he has a right to sell it at his own price. The manufacturer would not seem to have even the right to refuse to sell to such retailer, as this would be equivalent to restraining of trade, and would probably be illegal. Whether this decision will mean lower prices to the consumer is yet to be seen. There are a good many articles which are sold in this way with the distinct understanding that the retail prices shall not be cut. It is claimed that this is one way of guaranteeing the consumer against poor quality, but the consumer is very apt to conclude that it guarantees also that he shall pay the highest price, and he is very prone to class it with other well-known devices to prevent competition. He wants quality, but he wants quality purchased in a fsee market, and he thinks he is fairly well able to take care of himself.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION,

The financial stringency which was felt in the early spring has become more acute and money is uncommonly hard to get. The Montreal Witness tells us that to-day first mortage bonds are selling as high as nine per cent. in this country, while six per cent is being scorned in London, Eng. And yet business continues good in the main, the chief difficulty being the impossibility of enlarging or expanding to meet growing needs. There is no question, however, that speculative activity has received a hard, and probably a much needed and wholesome check. But the situation is a sufficiently serious one to compel more than ordinary caution There can be no question that the radical changes in the United States tariff will have a very considerable effect upon the state of trade in the United States and Canadian markets, cannot but sympathize with those of her big neighbor. However a good crop this fall ought to help matters a great deal, but even with that prospect it will be wise for business men and investors to exercise a little more than ordinary caution. We have really been going a little too fast, and it is time to slacken the pace somewhat. There is no need for undue alarm, as trade conditions are healthy enough, and with an enormous and increasing influx of immigrants the production both in crops and manufactures should increase by leaps and bounds, and within the next twenty-five years the growth of Canadian trade will probgbly multiply b)yond the expectations of even the most sanguine No doubt the present stringency is only temporary, and yet it is well to bear in mind that there is a tightness in the money market and to govern our financial operations accordingly.

Weary Tiredness Changed to Vigor

THAT PLAYED OUT FEELING WAS QUICKLY REMEDIED AND HEALTH RESTORED

Story of a Merchant Who Almost Lost His Business and His Health Through Neglecting Early Symptoms of Disease.

"My life for years has been of sedentary character," writes T. B. Titchfield, head of a well known firm in Buckingham. "Nine hours every day I spent at office work and took exercise only on Sunday. I disregarded the symptoms of ill-health which were all too apparent to my family. I grew thin, then pale, and before long I was jaundiced — eyes and skin were yellow, my strength and nerve energy were lowered, and I was quite unfitted for business. In the morning a lightness in the head, particularly when I bent over, made me very worried about my health. Most of the laxative medicines I found weakening, and knowing that I had to be at business every day I neglected myself rather than risk further weakness. Of course I grew worse, but by a happy chance I began to use Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I was forcibly struck by the fact that they neither caused griping nor nausea, and it seemed incredible that pills could tone, cleanse and regulate the system without causing any unpleasant after effects. Dr. Hamilton's Pills acted with me just as gentle as nature—they gave new life to my liver, strengthened my stomach, and won me back to perfect good health. My skin is clear; dizziness has disappeared, and my appetite, strength, spirits are perfect."

Refuse anything offered you instead of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are sure to cure. Sold in 25c boxes, five for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers, or postpaid from the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

KEEP KNIVES LIKE NEW

Some Timely Hints About Table and Kitchen Cutlery

A word to "those about to marry." Don't buy cheap knives! It is an expensive economy, for in a very short time the handles will work loose, the rivets will come out, and the blades, being of inferior steel, will neither polish well nor sharpen.

The following hints, which might be cut out and pasted on the knife-board or machine, will, if followed, lengthen the lives of your table knives and keep them in good appearance for years.

Never wet a knife-handle other than those of the same material as the blade. Have a "knife-jug" of such depth that if filled to the top with hot water the knife-handles are untouched. Handles that are indiscriminately plunged into water, not only become loose, but the color of the ivory, composition, or bone permanently turns dirty.

Those who have to clean knives would find their work much lightened if they warmed the knife-board before using it. And if women would only realize that half a minute spared to wipe dirty knives as soon as they come from the table means much labor saved; they would gladly do it.

Stains on knives can be instantly removed if rubbed with a piece of raw potato dipped in brickdust or knife-powder.

Knives that have been used for onions can be rid of the taste if the blades are run two or three times through a raw potato.

Handles that have become loose can be refixed by half-filling the hole with resin and quicklime, equal parts. Then heat the blade and insert it in the hole.

Knife-blades which have worn thin at the top—through bad cleaning—should be snapped off, and rounded with a file. Ivory-handled knives, if discolored, should be cleaned with lemon-juice and salt. To repolish the ivory, scour it with the finest sandpaper, make a paste of whitening and oil, and apply with a piece of flannel, rubbing it well, and polishing with a lightly oiled linen rag.

Bone handles should be sandpapered and polished; and pearl handles cleaned by rubbing with a soft cloth dipped in fine salt. Polish with a chamois leather.

"Reserve knives" can either be oiled and wrapped in brown paper before being put away, or dusted with finely powdered quicklime, and wrapped in flannel. This latter is the better plan, as there would be no suspicion of an oily taste if the knives were suddenly needed.

Special knives should always be kept for onions, bread, and for hot fat. The two latter will make the sharpest knife dull in a very short time.

Very good knives should be cleaned in charcoal powder. It gives a wonderful silver-like polish.

WOMEN FARMERS

Sheep farming and the raising of pigs has been successfully carried out by women in the West. For both of these enterprises a considerable amount of money is required at the outset as suitable quarters for the stock must be built at once after the initial outlay for land and stock, says a writer in the Toronto Globe. Then, too, several people, one or more of whom should have some special training in the caring and raising of stock, would be needed to do the work.

In these districts where an occasional coyote or wolf prowls around the sheep are a great temptation, and being unable to make much resistance are often lost. The pigs, on the other hand, put up a much better fight and so are very seldom attacked. But for any kind of stock the farmer must have water, and this is not always available.

A woman experienced in the farm and ranch life of the West suggests that the intending purchaser obtain some training in the branch or line of work she chooses before going out. Then select the district most suitable, and visit it, or have a competent friend visit it before purchasing. In this way the failure, or at least the poor results that have been the fate of enthusiastic but careless settlers will be avoided.

POLO.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 23. — The Varsity four-oared crew record on the Poughkeepsie course, made by Cornell in 1909, came very near being beaten today for the second time in two days when the Pennsylvania four-oared crew, under only fair conditions, rowed the two miles in 10:01 2-3. The record which is 10:01 was beaten three seconds last night by the Washington crew. The Pennsylvania four rowed the trial with absolutely no wind to the stern, rowed in a borrowed shell which does not fit the men and plouged through the rollers of a steamer. Under perfect conditions the time would have been much faster.

The 'varsity crew covered the four miles in 19:32 and the freshmen eight rowed the two miles in 9.20.

Coach Vail took his Wisconsin 'Varsity crew to the starting point and told them to take an easy row, but the oarsmen decided they would like a time trial, and they covered the four miles in 19:56.

Coach Ten Eyck took his two eights up the river, the 'varsity crew to the start and the fresh to the two-mile, the senior crew picking up the freshman on the way down the course. The 'varsity crew covered the stretch in 19'54. but no time was given on the freshman crew.

Coach Conibear had had his 'varsity eight and four oared crews do light practice, giving them long oars and putting them through a course of starts and spurts.

The Columbia crews came down the river to the bridge and returned. Coach Rice giving his crew practice at starts. No hard work was done.

Coach Courtney's program included a four-mile row down the river and return, the crews practicing a few starts on the return to the boathouse. All coaches announce that no more time trials will be held.

New York, June 23.—The gate receipts at the two games of the international cup series amounted to over $200,000, a greater sum than has ever been taken in during two days of baseball in the world's series. The exact figures were $95,000 at Tuesday's game and $106,000 at the second contest on Saturday.

The expenses are understood to be about $25,000, leaving a net profit of $176,000. What the American Polo Association will do with the balance has not yet been determined.

About 60,000 persons saw the two matches at prices ranging from $25 for some of the boxes to $2 for seats in the grand stand and 50 cents in the field.

PULP RESOURCES OF THE DOMINION

A Conservative Estimate Places These At Over Two Billion Cords on 265,000,000 Acres

Canada to-day possesses the largest resources in the way of growing timber suitable for the manufacture of pulp of any country in the world. The continued opening up of great mileage of new railroad brings this ever more prominently before the eyes of the world. The result undoubtedly now is that this country holds the key to the future in the great pulp and paper industry. He would be a bold man who would attempt to calculate in actual number of cords, or even in acreage, the extent of these resources. In fact. the more conservative of our public men, as well as men qualified to speak from the forestry standpoint, frown upon the pretence to give actual estimates. Perhaps some of the closest work along this line was in connection with the Ontario Government's survey and exploration work in Northern Ontario some years ago, when an attempt was made to find out as approximately as possible the pulp wood contents of each section covered by the survey parties. Speaking of the territory north of the Height of Land, the report says: "There is little pine timber, the trees being scattered and inferior in quality. Some small areas of red pine and some jack pine were met with, nearly all of these varieties found being south of Lake Abitibi. The best areas for pulp wood are on Low Bush and Circle Rivers, with their tributaries, where it is estimated that an area of 180 square miles will yield an average of seven cords to the acre or about 80,000 cords. Along Little Abitibi River, between Harris Lake and the boundary, the pulp wood is estimated at 750,000 cords. A belt reaching from Lower Abitibi Lake along the Abitibi River to Long Sault, eighty miles in length, will average seven cords to the acre. There are also considerable pulp wood areas to the west and north of Lower Abitibi Lake. District No. 2 embraces fifty miles on each side of a base line run west from the 198th mile post on the boundary line between Nipissing and Algoma districts to the Missinabie River, about 100 miles, and also the tract lying southerly along the Missinabie River up to near Missinabie Lake. Of the territory explored, sixty per cent. will yield on an average five cords of spruce wood to the acre, in addition to other timber. The prevailing timber is spruce and poplar, there being no pine or hard wood. The spruce. especially along the river banks, attains a size which renders it valuable for square timber, and the poplar is large and abundant, particularly on the Mattagami River. Special acres would cut fifteen cords of spruce, other acres would cut fifteen cords of spruce and ten of poplar. Some of these, if all the timber growing on them were made into cord wood, would show 60 to 70 cords to the acre." In the Northern Quebec, it is safe to say that conditions are largely similar to those prevailing in the analagous parts of Ontaro, with the comparison in favor of Quebec, as regard to area. Indeed, of all the provinces, Quebec must take rank as the premier in regard not only to pulp wood production, but also to pulp wood still standing unutilized. British Columbia, it is recognized, has millions of acres from which large qauntities of wood can be cut, but it is also recognized that the number of cords is almost incalculable. The newly organized Forestry Department in that province is busy making plans for comprehensive survey and chart work, and from the great energy with which they are starting out on their important work, great things may be expected. The tremendous difficulties in the way of having qualified men collecting reliable data in a country possessing such great natural obstacles as "a sea of mountains" and traversed by raging torrents are scarcely realized at their true value by the ordinary public. And the same thing applies to survey work in the northern wilderness of Quebec and Ontario. Nova Scotia is not generally credited with being one of the great lumber and pulp wood provinces, yet they form no mean asset. Dr. Fernow, who not long ago made a forest survey of that region, gives as his estimate an area of 5,500,000 acres under timber, with 24,000,000 cords as the probable output, divided up as follows: Mainland, 5,000,000 acres with 500,000 acres with 14,000,000 cords. New Brunswick contains large areas rinch in pulp wood trees, but so far as we have seen, no one has been daring enough to estimate the probable quantity of cords, section by section. Roughly summarizing all the data furnished by the Dominion Forestry Department and the forest authorities of the various provinces, and under a due consideration of the difficulties in the way of an approximate calculation of the stand of pulp wood timber throughout the Dominion, we would say that its pulp wood resources would approximate two billion cords on about 265,000,000 acres of land, made up as follows:

	Acres	Cords
Nova Scotia	5,000,000	24,000,000
New Brunsw'k	20,000,000	100,000,000
Quebec	60,000,000	600,000,000
Ontario	40,000,000	400,000,000
Br. Columbia	40,000,000	450,000,000
Dom. lands	100,000,000	450,000,000

Experience may show that this estimate may be exceeded or it may be beyond the mark. but it is looked upon as conservative by those who have had the best opportunities for judging. In any case it is far away and beyond the possessions of any other country in the world, and when the economic end of the pulp and paper industry is even better understood than it is to-day, it will surely mean the bringing forward of the Dominion of Canada to the position of premier pulp and paper manufacturer in the world.—Pulp and Paper Magazine.

Coming and Going

THE smooth, clean, economical concrete road is coming as certainly as the railroad, the steamship and the telegraph came.

And the muddy, sticky, deep-rutted dirt and macadam road is going —as surely as the stage-coach, the sailing ship and the spinning-wheel have gone.

It's simply a question of which communities will take advantage of the better, modern way of building roads now—enjoying its benefits from now on—and which ones will continue to "get along" in the poor old way until forced by competition to avail themselves of science's latest contribution to public convenience.

Concrete Roads

are not experiments. There is no "chance" taken with their adoption. They have been quietly proving their value for twenty years. Concrete roads built twenty years ago, when concrete construction was nothing like so far advanced as it is to-day, are still giving absolutely satisfactory service.

Concrete roads have proven themselves best—under all sorts of conditions, from the standpoints of both service and economy. Their first cost is near that of good macadam, their service is greatly superior, and their final cost—the only one to consider in comparing roads—is a great deal less.

These are strong statements. They might be stronger and then not over-state the truth. Concrete roads "back them up" with facts—facts that prove concrete to be the best and cheapest material for road construction—either for city streets or country highways.

Many Canadian counties and cities are already using concrete pavements. Many others are preparing to do so as fast as they can.

They will be enjoying the many advantages that good roads bring, while others who stand by the "poor old way" with its mud and ruts and expense and repairs are waiting—for what?

Every citizen should have the information on concrete roads which we will send free upon request.

CAPTURED A LION

Feat of a Daring Hunter in Colorado State

An immense mountain lion, the largest ever captured in Colorado, was caught in a most sensational manner by Uri Hotchkiss, the famous hunter and trapper of Colona, six miles east of that place. Hotchkiss climbed a tree, in which the lion was crouching, unarmed except for a rope. The lion chased him down the tree several times, but finally Hotchkiss got within about three feet from him and threw a rope around his neck. The men on the other end of the rope attempted to pull the lion out of the tree, but were unable to do so. Hotchkiss worked around behind the lion, and twisted his tail until they jarred him loose. After getting the lion down they threw another rope around his leg. Hotchkiss then placed him on the saddle, fastening his feet and head to the horn, climbed on behind, and brought him into Colona.

DAVID LIVINGSTONE

Few men have made a deeper and more permanent impression upon the world than David Livingstone, who came of humble parentage, but whose contributions to sociology, geography, commerce, philanthropy and Christian missions placed him among Britain's greatest heroes and leaders enrolled in Westminster Abbey. Dr. Livingstone's explorations opened to the world nearly all of Africa from the Equator to the Tropic of Capricorn. The lakes Ngami, Bangweolo, Mweru, Nyassa, and Tanganyika, the Victoria Falls, the Zambesi River and the southern affluents of the Kongo are some of his contributions to geography. In his travels of nearly 30,000 miles on the continent, by scientific observations, he was able to prove to the nations that beyond the Kalahari desert and beyond the fever-stricken coast swamps, there were well-timbered highlands and fertile soil. One of his great objects in life was to strike a blow at the horrible slave traffic. Toward this he directed his energies. David Livingstone's efforts brought freedom to more people than those of any other man who ever lived. However, the supreme object of his life was to open a highway to the heart of Africa for Christianity.

The Quiet of the East

Writing of the rush and turmoil of city life in the Occident, a Japanese woman, Madame Osaki, says:

"What room was there for the love of the small heaven, the song of birds, the leisurely cultivation of a favorite flower, or the repossful enjoyment of friends and of nature? As I gazed at the men and women rushing past me, I felt that the simple-lived Japanese, in his one-storied house and bamboo-fenced garden, watching for the first plum blossom in the moonlight, or tending his little pot of morning glories at summer dawns knew more of the secret of happiness and contentment than many a millionaire in his palace home."

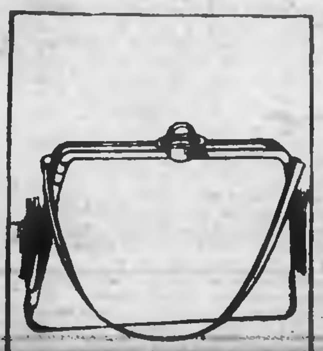
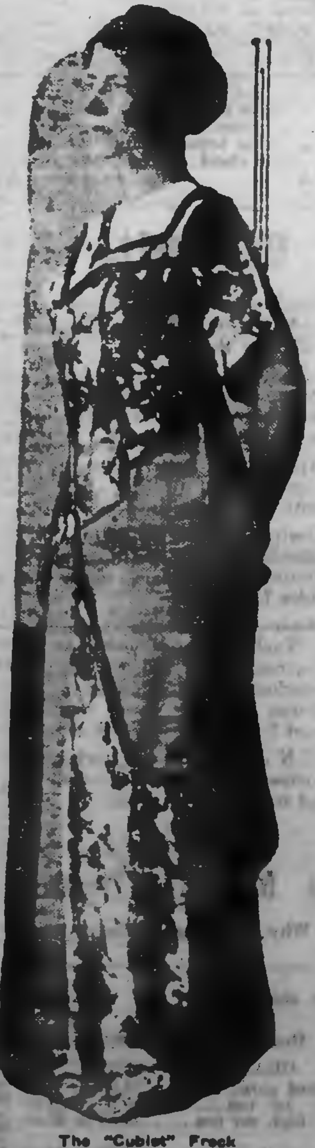
LOCK FOR HANDBAGS

Makes Them Safe Against the Prying Fingers of Thieves

The ordinary handbag is the joy of pickpockets, as many women know to their sorrow. It is a very simple matter for the nimble-fingered rogues to open a bag and abstract the purse without the owner being any the wiser. A New York man has devised a bag safely closed under ordinary conditions. A spring-actuated, ball-shaped handle is hinged to one side of the jaw of the handbag while the other jaw is in an interlocking rib and a secondary locking device pivoted to the side of the jaw on which the handle hooks. This secondary device has an opening at the top to allow the handle to pass through, and there are clasps which lock the jaws at opposite sides when the bag is closed. Thus fastened, the bag cannot be opened casually, but requires more attention than a thief can afford to give.



CAN'T BE OPENED CASUALLY.



The "Cubist" Frock

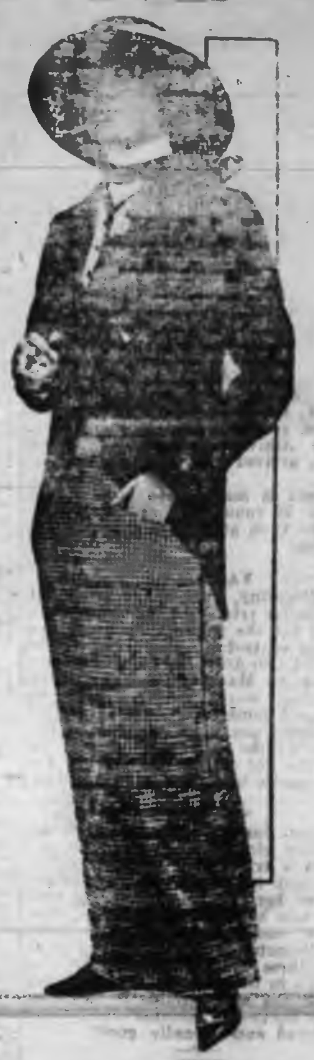
This design is called the "cubist" gown and is made of Bulgarian brocade pale green satin, and ribbon black velvet. You see that the designer has followed the cubist idea thus far, that the two sides are not alike. The neck trimming is longer on one side than it is on the other, and the drapery is high upon one hip and low on the other.

TO SEE BOTTOM OF BAKING CAK

It would be a great convenience for the housewife to be able to examine the bottom of a cake she is baking to watch the process of baking. [illegible] up to date there have been very few ways offered her to do this without removing the cake from the pan.

An ingenious [illegible], found a way, however. She cut out the bottom of her cake pan leaving about ½ inch of the metal around the four sides.

Then she obtained a piece of glass the size of the bottom of the pan and put this in for a bottom. Now she can look at the bottom of her baking cake as well as the sides and in addition to this has a much more sanitary baking pan as the bottom can be removed and the sides more easily washed.



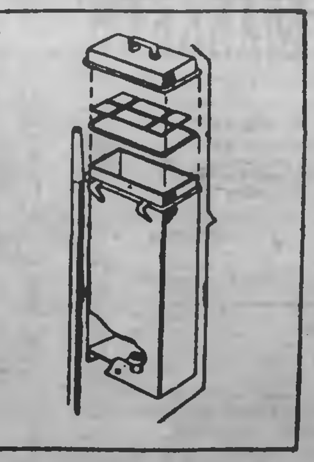
The Tailored Girl

Notwithstanding the many draperies that are worn there still is seen the strictly tailored girl. She is usually young, for only a young woman can stand the plain lines of the correctly tailored suit. This costume is of blue and white check for the skirt and of plain blue for the coat. There is a white vestee with dark blue buttons and binding, with a white collar and blue choker with a large sailor hat. Note the side pocket in the skirt.

NEW ICE CREAM CAN

Solves Problem of How to Get Cream Out Without Trouble

Most of us have, at one time or another, wrestled with one of these rectangular ice cream moulds in which the cream was stuck. A wide-awake confectioner, however, devised a can, also rectangular, from which it is very easy to remove the contents intact. Instead of being made in two longitudinal sections, this can is open at one end, which is the top. There is a hole in the bottom and a false bottom sets over this. To remove the cream, all that need be done is to take off the lid and insert a stick in the hole in the bottom. With this you push the false bottom out and the block of cream, of course, precedes it in perfect condition.



FALSE BOTTOM PUSHES OUT

Home Made Shoe Trees

Take a pair of thick stockings or socks that fit the feet, fill with sawdust, and sew up the top so that the sawdust does not come out. When you take off your shoes put them on these shoe trees. The sawdust will absorb the perspiration and keep the shoes in perfect shape. The sawdust can be changed when necessary.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith [illegible] while the prisoner is sent for. An [illegible] comes from General Varney for Wil[illegible] to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

CHAPTER IX—The prisoner is thrust into the room alone with Thorne, who recognizes him as his older brother, Henry Dumont. They put up a fake fight. Henry implores his brother to shoot him in the leg. Thorne refuses and Henry accidentally kills himself. Arrelsford rushes into the room with the guard. Thorne nonchalantly says: "Corporal, here is your prisoner, we had a fight and I shot him."

CHAPTER X—Caroline goes to the war department telegraph office to send a message.

"Well, you know how it is. They generally whip around quite a while before they make up their minds what they want to do. I don't suppose they will trouble you much. It's as quiet as a church down the river. Good night."

"See here, Mr. Foray, wait a moment. You had better not walk out and leave—no matter," continued Thorne, as the operator stopped and turned back. "It's none of my busivice," that is a dangerous thing to do."

"What is it, captain?" asked Foray, somewhat surprised.

"Leave a cigar lying around an office like that. Somebody might walk in any minute and take it away. I can't watch your cigars all day."

He picked up the cigar, and before Foray could prevent it, lighted it and began to smoke. Foray laughed.

"Help yourself, captain, and if there is any trouble you will find a revolver on the table."

"I see," said Thorne, "but what makes you think there is going to be trouble?"

"Oh, well, there might be."

"Been having a bad dream?" asked the captain nonchalantly.

"No, but you never can tell. All sorts of things are liable to happen in an office like this, and—"

"That's right," said Thorne, pulling away at his cigar, "you never can tell. But see here. If you never can tell when you are going to have trouble you had better take that gun along with you. I have one of my own."

"Well," said the operator, "if you have one of your own, I might as well."

He took the revolver up and tucked it in his belt. "Look out for yourself, captain. Goodby. I will be back as soon as the president gives me that dispatch. That dispatch I have just finished is for the commissary general's office, but it can wait until the morning."

"All right," said Thorne, and the next moment the operator turned away while the clicking of the key called Thorne to the table. It took him but a few minutes to write the brief message which he addressed and turned to the first messenger, "Quartermaster General."

"He wasn't in his office a short time ago, sir," said the messenger.

"Very well, find him. He has probably gone home and he has to have this message."

"Very good, sir."

The key kept up its clicking. In a short time another message was written off.

"Ready here," cried Thorne, looking at the other messenger. "This is for the secretary of the treasury, marked private. Take it to his home."

"He was down at the cabinet meeting a little while ago, sir," said the second messenger.

"Look Out for Yourself, Captain."

"No difference, take it to his house and wait until he comes."

The instant the departing messenger left him alone in the room Thorne leaped to his feet and ran with catlike swiftness to the door, opened it, and quickly but carefully examined the corridor to make sure that no one was there on duty. Then he closed the door and turned to the nearest window, which he opened also, and looked out on the balcony, which he saw was empty. He closed the window and came back to the table, unbuckling his belt and coat as he came. These he threw on the table. The coat fell back, and he glanced in the breast pocket to see that a certain document was in sight and at hand, where he could get it quickly. Then he took his revolver, which he had previously slipped from his belt to his hip pocket, and laid it down beside the instrument.

After a final glance around him to see that he was still alone and unobserved, he seized the key, on which he sounded a certain call. An expert telegrapher would have recognized it, a dash, four dots in rapid succession, then two dots together, and then two more (— ....). He waited a few moments, and when no answer came he signaled the call a second time, and after another longer wait he sent it a third time.

After this effort he made a longer pause, and just as he had about reached the end of his patience—he was in a fever of anxiety, for upon what happened in the next moment the failure or the success of the whole plan absolutely turned—the silent key clicked out an answer, repeating the same signal which he himself had made. The next moment he made a leap upon the key, but before he could send a single letter steps were heard outside in the corridor.

Thorne released the key, leaned back in his chair, seized a match from the little holder on the table and struck it, and when another messenger entered he seemed to be lazily lighting his cigar. He cursed in his heart at the inopportune arrival. Another uninterrupted moment and he would have sent the order, but as usual he gave no outward evidence of his extreme annoyance. The messenger came rapidly down toward the table and handed Captain Thorne a message.

"From the secretary of war, Captain Thorne," he said saluting, "and he wants it to go out right away."

"Here, here," said Thorne, as the messenger turned away, "what's all this?" He ran his fingers through the envelope, tore it open, and spread out the dispatch. "Is that the secretary's signature?" he asked.

The messenger came back.

"Yes, sir; I saw him sign it himself. I'm his personal messenger."

"Oh!" said Thorne, spreading the dispatch out on the table and O.K.-ing it, "you saw him sign it yourself, did you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very well. We have to be pretty careful tonight," he explained, "there is something on. You are sure of this, are you?"

"I could swear to that signature anywhere, sir," said the messenger.

"Very well," said Thorne, "you may go."

CHAPTER XIII.

The Tables Are Turned.

As soon as the door was closed behind the messenger Thorne laid his cigar down on the table. Then he picked up the dispatch from the secretary of war which the messenger had just brought in and folded it very dexterously. Then with a pair of scissors which he found in a drawer he cut off the lower part of the secretary's dispatch containing his signature. He put this between his teeth and tore the rest into pieces. He started to throw the pieces into the waste basket but after a moment's reflection he stuffed them into his trousers pocket. Then he picked up his coat from the back of the chair and took from the inside breast pocket another document written on the same paper as that which had just come from the secretary of war. Spreading this out on the table he cut off the signature and quickly pasted to it the piece of the real order bearing the real signature. He carefully wiped this pasted dispatch with his handkerchief, making an exceedingly neat job of it.

As he did so he smiled slightly. Fortune, which had dealt him so many rebuffs had evened up matters a little by giving him this opportunity. He had now in his possession a dispatch bearing the genuine signature of the secretary of war. Even if he were interrupted the chances were he would still be able to send it. So soon as he had doctored the dispatch he sat down at the instrument and once more essayed to send the message.

Now during all this rapid bit of manipulation Thorne had been under close observation, for Arrelsford and Edith Varney had come from the commissary general's office, where they had concealed themselves while Thorne examined the porch, and had stepped back to the nearest window and were intently watching. Fortunately his back partially concealed his actions and the watchers could not tell exactly what he had done, although it was quite evident that he was in some way altering some kind of a dispatch.

Just as Thorne began to send the message Arrelsford accidentally struck the window with his elbow, making a slight sound. The instant he did so, he and the girl vanished from sight. Once again Thorne released the key, and his hand moved quietly but rapidly from the instrument to the revolver. The instant it was in his hand he sprang to his feet, whirled about, leaped to the gas bracket and turned off the light. The room was left in darkness, save for the faint illumination of the moonlight through the windows.

Immediately he turned off the light he ran to the doors leading into the hall. They were provided with heavy, old-fashioned bolts which he shot swiftly, locking them on the inside. Then with the utmost caution he edged around the wall until he came to the first window. He waited with dow, and with his right advanced his revolver. After a moment's pause he threw it open quickly and stepped out on the balcony. It was empty as before.

He must have made a mistake, he thought, since no one was there, and he blamed the whole incident to his over-agitated nerves. Indeed, what he had gone through in the preceding two hours would have shaken any man's nerves, might have broken most men's. He was annoyed at having wasted precious time, and turned to the table again, stopping on his way to relight the light.

Once more he seized the key. He could telegraph equally well with either hand. He did not lay down his revolver on the table this time, but kept it in his right hand while the fingers of his left hand touched the button. He had scarcely made a dot or a dash when there was a sudden flash of light and the sound of an explosion, that of a heavy revolver, mingled with the crash of shattered glass. Captain Thorne's fingers fell from the key and a jet of blood spurted out upon the table and the papers.

He rose to his feet with incredible swiftness, his revolver in his right hand, only to be confronted by Arrelsford at the front window. The latter held in his hand, pointed fairly and squarely at Thorne, the heavy service revolver with which he had just shot him in the left wrist. Thorne made a swift motion with his right hand, but Arrelsford was too quick for him.

"Drop that gun!" he shouted. "Drop it quick, or you are a dead man!"

There was no possibility of disobedience. Thorne straightened up and laid his revolver on the table. The two confronted each other, and if looks could have killed they had both been dead men. The soldier shrugged his shoulders at last, took his handkerchief out of his pocket, put one end of it between his teeth, and with the other hand wrapped it tightly around his wounded wrist.

The civilian meantime advanced toward him, keeping him covered with his revolver.

"Do you know why I didn't kill you like the dog you are, just now?" he asked truculently, as he drew nearer.

"Because you are such a damned bad shot, I suppose," coolly answered Thorne between his teeth, still tying the bandage, after which he calmly picked up his cigar and began smoking again with the utmost indifference.

Whatever fate had in store for him could better be met, he thought swiftly at this juncture, provided he kept his temper, and so he spoke as nonchalantly as before. Indeed his manner had always been most irritating and exacerbating to Arrelsford.

"Maybe you will change your mind about that later on," the latter rejoined.

"Well, I hope so," said Thorne, completing his bandage and tying the knot so as to leave the fingers of his left hand free. "You see, it isn't pleasant to be riddled up this way."

"Next time you'll be riddled somewhere else besides the wrist. There's only one reason why you are not lying there now with a bullet through your head."

"Only one?" queried Thorne.

"Only one."

"Do I hear it?"

"You do. I gave my word of honor to some one outside that I wouldn't kill you, and—"

"Oh, then this isn't a little tete-a-tete just between ourselves. You have some one with you?" asked Thorne, interested greatly in this new development, wondering who the some one was who had interfered in his behalf. Perhaps that evident friendship might be turned to account later on. For a moment not an idea of who was there entered Thorne's mind.

"Yes, I have some one with me, Captain Thorne, who takes quite an interest in what you are doing tonight," returned Arrelsford sneeringly.

"That is very kind, I am sure. Is the—er—gentleman going to stay out there all alone on the balcony or shall I have the pleasure of inviting him in here and having a charming little three-handed—"

The third party answered the question, for Edith Varney came through the window with the shattered pane through which Arrelsford had fired and entered. Thorne was shocked beyond measure by her arrival, not the slightest suspicion that she could have been there had crossed his mind. So she had been an eye-witness to his treachery. He had faced Arrelsford's pistol with the utmost composure; there was something in Edith Varney's look that cut him to the heart, yet she did not look at him either. On the contrary, she carefully avoided his glance. Instead she turned to Arrelsford.

"I think I will go, Mr. Arrelsford," she said in a low, choked voice.

"Not yet, Miss Varney," he said peremptorily.

The girl gave him no heed. She turned and walked blindly toward the door.

"I don't wish to stay here any longer," she faltered.

"One moment, please," said Arrelsford, as she stopped, "we need you."

"For what?"

"As a witness."

"You can send for me if you need me; I will be at home."

"I am sorry," said Arrelsford, again interposing, "I will have to detain you until I turn him over to the guard. It won't take long."

The middle window was open and he stopped to it, still keeping an eye on Thorne, and shouted at the top of his voice:

"Call the guard! Corporal of the guard! Send up the guard to the telegraph office!"

The note of triumph in his voice was unmistakable. From the street the three inside heard a faint cry:

"What's the matter?" who calls the guard?"

"Up here in the telegraph office," said Arrelsford, "send them up quick."

The answer was evidently sufficient, for they could hear the orders and the tumult in the square below.

"Corporal of the guard, post four! Fall in the guard! Fall in! Lively, men!" and so on.

The game appeared to be up this time. Mr. Arrelsford held all the winning cards, thought Thorne, and he was playing them skillfully. He ground his teeth at the thought that another moment and the order would have had played him a scurvy trick, it had thwarted him at the last move, and Arrelsford had so contrived that his treachery had been before the woman he loved. Under other circumstances the wound in his wrist would have given him exquisite pain; as it was he scarcely realized at the time that he had been hurt.

Arrelsford still stood by the window, glancing out on the square but keeping Thorne under close observation. The evil look in his eyes and the malicious sneer on his lips well seconded the expression of triumph in his face. He had the man he hated where he wanted him. It was a splendid piece of work that he had performed, and in the performance he sated his private vengeance and carried out his public duty.

On his part, Thorne was absolutely helpless. There was that in the bearing of the woman he loved that prevented him from approaching her. He shot a mute look of appeal to her, which she received with marble face, apparently absolutely indifferent to his presence, yet she was suffering scarcely less than he. In her anguish she turned desperately to Arrelsford.

"I am not going to stay," she said decisively, "I don't wish to be a witness."

"Whatever your feelings may be, Miss Varney," persisted Arrelsford, "I can't permit you to refuse."

"If you won't take me downstairs I will find the way myself," returned the girl as if she had not heard.

She turned resolutely toward the door. Before she reached it the heavy tramping of the guard was heard.

"Too late," said Arrelsford triumphantly, "you can't go now, the guard is here."

Edith could hear the approaching soldiers as well as anybody. The way was barred, she realised instantly. Well, if she could not escape, at least she could get out of sight. She turned and opened the nearest window and stepped out. Arrelsford knew that she could not go far, and that he could produce her whenever he wanted her. He made no objection to her departure that way, therefore. Instead he looked at Thorne.

"I have you just where I want you at last," he said mockingly, as the trampling feet came nearer. "You thought you were mighty smart, but you will find that I can match your trick every time."

Outside in the hall the men came to a sudden halt before the door. One of them knocked loudly upon it.

"What's the matter here?" cried the sergeant of the guard without.

The handle was tried and the door was shoved violently, but the brass bolt held.

"Let us in!" he cried angrily.

Quick as a flash of lightning an idea came to Thorne.

"Sergeant!" he shouted in a powerful voice. "Sergeant of the guard!"

"Sir!"

"Break down the door! Break it down with your musket butts!"

As the butts of the muskets pounded against the heavy mahogany panels Arrelsford cried out in great surprise:

"What did you say?"

In his astonishment he did not notice a swift movement Thorne made toward the door.

"You want them in, don't you?" the soldier said, as he approached the door. "It is locked and—"

But Arrelsford recovered himself a little and again presented his revolver.

"Stand where you are," he cried, but Thorne by this time had reached the door.

"Smash it down, sergeant," he cried. "What are you waiting for? Batter it down!"

The next moment the door gave way with a crash, and into the room poured the guard. The grizzled old sergeant had scarcely stepped inside the room when Thorne shouted in tones of the fiercest authority, pointing at Arrelsford:

"Arrest that man!"

Before the dazed secret service agent could say a word or press the trigger the soldiers were upon him.

"He got in here with a revolver," continued Thorne more quietly, "and is playing hell with it. Hold him fast!"

CHAPTER XIV.

The Call of the Key.

This astonishing denouement fairly paralyzed Arrelsford. With a daring and ability for which he had not given Thorne credit, and which was totally unexpected, although what he had learned of his previous career might have given him some warning, the tables had been turned upon him by a man whom he confidently fancied he had entrapped beyond possibility of escape!

His amazement held him speechless for a moment, but his natural resourcefulness came back to him with his returning presence of mind. He knew the futility of an attempt to struggle with his captors, he therefore decided to try to reason with them.

"Sergeant," he began, quietly enough, "my orders are—"

But Thorne would not let him continue. Having gained the advantage he was determined to keep it to the end and for that purpose he followed up his first blow, ruthlessly pressing

Old Folks' Coughs Permanently Cured

Elderly people take cold easily. Unlike young folks, they recover slowly, if ever. That is why so many people past middle life die of pneumonia. Even though pneumonia does not develop and kill, coughs certainly weaken all elderly people.

Cough Syrups seldom do much good because they upset digestion. Any druggist or doctor knows that a much more effective treatments is "CATARRHOZONE," which heals and soothes the irritated surfaces of the throat.

In using Catarrhozone you do not take medicine into the stomach—you simply breathe into the throat, nose and lungs rich piney balsamic vapor, so full of healing power that colds, catarrh and bronchitis disappear almost instantly.

"At sixty-eight years of age I can testify that I am never troubled with coughs or colds," writes J. E. Pilgrim, of Kingston. "They used to be the bain of my life, and that was before I used Catarrhozone, which was recommended to me by C. L. Prouse, druggist. To use Catarrhozone is just like being in an immense pine woods. The balsamic vapor of Catarrhozone is like a tonic, it is so stimulating to the breathing organs, so soothing to sore spots, so full of power to drive out colds and congestion. I will always use and recommend Catarrhozone as a preventive and cure for coughs, colds, bronchitis, throat irritation and catarrh.

(Signed) "J. E. PILGRIM."

A Catarrhozone Inhaler in your pocket or purse enables you to stop a cold with the first sneeze. Large size costs $1.00 and supplies treatment for two months; small size, 50c.; trial size, 25c.: all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Health and Beauty Answers

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

Ada: The unlovely condition of your skin is due to the powder and greasy cream you use. Make up and use this dainty lotion and your complexion will be the envy of your friends. Dissolve 4 ounces spurmax in either ½ pint hot water or witch hazel, and add 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. This delightful lotion dries quickly after being applied and gives to the skin an exquisite tint and velvety smoothness. The spurmax lotion cannot be detected when on and will make rough, oily, "muddy" skins smooth and clear. Use it for freckles, tan and sunburn.

Myrtle: That unwelcome fuzz on your cheek will vanish after one application of a delatone paste, made by mixing enough delatone and water to cover the hairs not wanted. After it is on 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and it will be smooth and hairless. This method is unfailing, but be sure to get delatone.

Mrs. Geo.: You can have pretty eye brows and lashes by rubbing a little pyroxin on eyebrows nightly and for short, straight lashes, apply pyroxin at lash-roots with thumb and fore finger. This treatment will give you thick, glossy eyebrows and long, curly lashes. Be careful and don't get any pyroxin where no hair is wanted.

Margie: From what you say, I believe your weakness and languor are traceable to your anaemic condition. Make up and use this old-fashioned cleanser and tonic and your health and strength will soon return: Dissolve 1 ounce kardene in ½ pint alcohol (never use whisky), then add ½ cupful sugar and hot water to make a quart and take of this 1 tablespoonful three times a day. This rids the blood of poisonous accumulations, builds up worn tissues and fortifies the body against disease. The kardene tonic is especially good for banishing pimples, blotches, "muddiness" and other complexion blemishes, and after a regular course of this treatment your skin will be clear and soft.

Lydia: You hardly need to consult an oculist. Try this simple home-remedy: In 1 pint clear water dissolve 1 ounce crystos, then put a few drops in each eye twice daily. This will reduce inflammation and take out the soreness. If after this is done, your vision still remains blurred, you of course will require glasses. The crystos eye-tonic is excellent for granulated eyelids and weak, watery eyes.

Miss G.: The cause of your hair being streaky and unmanageable no doubt is the use of soap or some other harmful thing for shampooing. Cleanse your scalp and hair with a solution of canthrox. Just dissolve a teaspoonful of it in a cup of hot water and you will have ample mixture. This creates an abundance of white, thick lather that dissolves every atom of dust, dandruff and excess oil, and rinsing leaves the hair and scalp wonderfully clean. After a canthrox shampoo the head feels good and the hair dries quickly without streaking and is soft, fluffy and easy to do up.

Alma: You can soon get rid of that burdensome fat if you take the parnotis treatment, made by dissolving 4 ounces parnotis in 1½ pints hot water. Strain when cool and take 1 tablespoonful before each meal. This parnotis treatment is entirely harmless and reduces the weight without resorting to dieting or tiresome exercises.

Frankie: You can cure your hair troubles. Use a plain quinzoin hair-tonic and you will soon restore your hair to its former rich color and soft fluffiness. To make the tonic add 1 ounce quinzoin to 1½ pint alchol, then ½ pint water. Applied regularly, this quinzoin tonic banishes the dry scaly or excessive oily condition and when your scalp and hair-roots are healthy and vigorous, a bountiful growth of beautiful hair is sure to result.

Rose: You can quickly remove wrinkles and keep the face velvety and smooth at very little cost by making at home and using regularly this greaseless vegetable jelly-cream, which does not grow hair. Get from your druggist 1 ounce almozoin and dissolve it in ½ pint of cold water or witch hazel, adding 2 teaspoonfuls of glycerine. Stir and let stand one day. Apply to wrinkled surface and leave through night, then wash off and use more of the cream as a massage. This treatment will remove and prevent the most obstinate wrinkles or finest crow's feet, while softening the skin to a velvety texture.

Local Merchants Fooled!

Yesterday afternoon two George street merchants went to the Circus grounds. They walked round, but did not enter the "big top." On their round they met a man with a number of lizards chained by brass chains to a big card. The vendor cried "Here you are gents, little alligators right from Florida, 25 cents each!" They bought. As a Times representative left the circus, he saw the purchasers digging up a cow-slip or some such plant. Under it they found a grub three-quarters the size of the "aligators." As the Times man left, one of them, remarked "that man is a fraud. He said the alligators would eat bugs, and this one wont."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Odor of New Linoleum

To a great many persons, sensitive persons, an odor which prevails an great length of time is very disagreeable and some odors are very obstinate. In order to get rid of the odor of new linoleum the following recipe is given in a recent issue of La Nature: Mop the linoleum with a sponge or piece of old carpet wetted with diluted javelle water (1 to 10). Leave over night, closing all doors and windows; next morning air thoroughly, and over the dried surface pass lightly a mop wet with water containing 10 per cent. sodic bisulphide. Leave again over night with doors and windows closed. Next morning wash several times thoroughly with water.

The Growth of Buenos Ayres

Of all the great cities, Buenos Ayres is said to be growing the most rapidly. The most artistically built of the cities of the new world, it reminds the visitor of Madrid or Paris. This magnificent capital of the Argentine Republic had in 1800 only 40,000 inhabitants; in 1852, 76,000; in 1869 187,000; in 1887, 429,000; in 1895 655,000; in 1904, 951,000; the census of 1910 brought it up to 1,282,117 while the population since that time has grown astonishingly. The Mayor, in a recent public speech, said that in four years the population of Buenos Ayres, at the present rate of growth would surpass that of Paris.

DOMINION CABINET IN CLOSE TOUCH WITH WHOLE COUNTRY

Ministers Visiting All Parts of Canada to Find at First Hand Needs of Country

(Special to The Times.)

Ottawa, June 24.—The Borden cabinet is eager for work and is getting into touch with the different classes of the community, also finding out at first hand the needs of the country. For this purpose many of the ministers contemplate visiting certain parts of the Dominion this summer. Hon. J. D. Hazen, representing the Maritime Provinces will join East and West in a trip which he intends to take. At present he is inspecting the harbors and fisheries of the East.

In July he will go to the Pacific coast and after attending to other business there will be in Vancouver on the 15th of July, when he will represent the Governor-General and the Canadian Government on the occasion of the arrival of the New Zealand, the splendid Dreadnought which the Antipodean Colony contributed to the defence of the Empire.

After this function has been discharged Mr. Hazen will journey northward and will visit Prince Rupert and Queen Charlotte Island in connection with some matters affecting his department of which he wished to secure information at first hand.

Coderre Goes to Dawson

Hon. Louis Coderre, the new secretary of State has had recently given into his charge the department of mines and he has been devoting much time to its development. In August he will pay a visit to the Coast and go right up into the Dawson district and there get into touch with the methods used in mining and see for himself what is needed. Afterwards he can crystallize into legislation the result of his travels. He will then be one of the very few members of any cabinet, who has ventured so far in the discharge of his duty.

Other Members Go West.

These journeys entail much labor upon the men who take them but they are an evidence of the fact that the present Cabinet is anxious to serve the people who put them in power.

Hon. Robert Rogers is planning an extensive western trip inspecting the public works of the Dominion. Hon. W. T. White also expects to visit the West and likewise Hon. T. W. Crothers.

GOVERNMENT IS ESTABLISHING OWN BRICK AND TILE FACTORY

Plant at Mimico to Have Capacity of Ten Million Bricks A Yerr--Output to be Used Solely Upon Provincial Buildings--To be in Operation This Fall

Toronto, June 24. — Immediately north of the C.P.R. tracks at Mimico and about a quarter of a mile west of the Victoria Industrial School, the Ontario Government is building a large brick and tile factory with an estimated output of 10,000,000 bricks a year.

The work was started only a month ago after expert advice had been secured from all over the continent on the nature of the clay deposit. The experts reported that it was excellent for brick making and contended that a tile product second to none in the world could be manufactured. Work was immediately started, special officials being put in charge of construction.

The excavations for the building are nearly finished. The structure will be completed by the end of three months and it is expected that the factory will be in operation this fall.

An Immense Saving.

The brick and tile produced will be used exclusively on Government buildings, it being estimated that material to the value of some $75,000 will be used for the new Whitby Hospital for the Insane alone. The work is being done by prison labor, the camp and temporary quarters of the laborers being situated immediately east of the factory site.

Officials at the Parliament buildings refuse to discuss the undertaking in any way, but it is understood that the new Government industry is the result of the determination of the Ministers to exercise every economy in the construction of their own institutions in the Province.

MAN MILITANT ON "STRIKE" IS FREED

Edwy Clayton, the Chemist and Bomb-Maker, in For Seven Days.

London, June 24.—Edwy Clayton, the analytic chemist who was sentenced to 21 months' imprisonment on June 17 for conspiracy to commit malicious damage to property in conjunction with the militant suffragette leaders, was released from the jail to-day in a weak condition as a result of a hunger strike. It appears from statements made by released prisoners that other convicts who are not suffragettes have followed the example of the suffragettes. Three men at the present time decline to eat food in prison and are being forcibly fed.

CAMELS IMPORTED FOR USE ON UNITED STATES DESERTS

Texas Stockmen Bring Two Hundred from Orient to Go Where Autos Fail

Pueblo, Colo., June 24.—J. H. Trimbe, one of the leading stockmen of Texas, is at the head if an association which purposes to transport camels from the oriental deserts to those of New Mexico, Arizona and California, and the semi-arid wastes of Texas. The association purposes to import 100 camels and place them on a ranch on the Rio Grande about 160 miles south of Cape Verde.

The areas mentioned, although they offer great possibilities to the seeker after valuable metals, are little traversed, either by railroads or wagon roads, sich as would be suitable for motor traffic, for the soil, which is largely drifting sand, makes the construction of durable roadways impossible.

The camel, with his thick padded feet, seems to have been expressly designed by nature for just this sort of travel, and added to its ability to travel over these sandy wastes without tiring, the animals other characteristics, its swiftness, burden-bearing power and the fact that it can go long distances without food or water, makes it as available for these American desert regions as for those of the orient.

Not First Occasion.

This is not the first occasion on which an effort has been made to start camel culture in the United States. Cefferson Davis, when he Pierce's cabinet was made the originator of a project for the raising of camels by the Government. That experiment also was made in the neighborhood of Cape Verde, and the old buildings modelled after a caravansary in Asia Minor, are still in existence, although in a dilapitated condition.

With the idea that the camels would be useful in Indian warfare because they could carry despatches more swiftly than horses, and that in other ways they could be made useful in the deserts, the Government imported forty camels, with twelve Armenian drivers and their families in 1856.

But just when the camels were about to demonstrate their ability to be of service in the new land, the breaking out of the Civil War and the election of Davis to the Presidency of the Confederacy interfered.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., SWEPT BY TORNADO

Tallahassee, Fla., June 24. —A tornado swept over this city last evening, unroofing the state capital and many stores, ruining the stock of merchants, tearing trees out by the roots, and twisting telegraph, telephone and electric light poles off at the base, plunging the city into darkness and cutting off communication with the outside world for hours.

The funnel shaped cloud, carrying wind, rain and hail, swept across the country, killing and maiming live stock, damaging the cotton and corn crops and razing buildings. So far

TO WIND UP UNION LIFE COMPANY NOW CONTEMPLATED

Toronto, June 24....A petition for winding up of the Union Life Assurance Company by Frederick Armstrong Addison Campbell, was made at Osgoode Hall this morning before Sir Glenholme Falconbridge. An offer of reinsurance has been received from John R. Hegeman, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York, and in substance the offer is to reinsure all the existing policies, both ordinary and industrial, of the Union Life Assurance Company, in consideration of the transfer to the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of the assets of the Union Life Assutance Company, but subject to the condition that the Metropolitan will only deal with an official liquidator, who must be the Superintendent of Insurance or some other Government officer, and that no fees or expense be charged for liquidation.

The Union Life Assurance Company was incorporated on May 15, 1909, with the head office in Toronto, and a capital stock of $2,000,000, the total amount paid up on the company's shares being $742,705.63.

GIBSON COMPLAINS THAT HE IS TAUNTED IN PRISON CELL

The condemned Man in Jail, Makes Startling Complaint to Governor Chambers

Toronto, June 24.—Mr. Charles Gibson, sr., father of the young man who is under sentence of death at the jail, complained to Governor Chambers and to the Police Commissioners of an alleged misconduct on the part of Constable Chapman of the police force.

Mr. Gibson's statement to-day is that the officer, while over at the jail secured admission to the "death cell" and going up to the condemned man, snapped his fingers in his face, saying, "c told you, Gibson, that you hadn't that much chance of a new trial.j' The boy reported the taunt to his father, and the latter is exceedingly angry over the incident.

Father is Angry.

"My boy has enough to worry him without a police officer treating him in this way," he declared. "What right has a police officer to go in to see my boy like that when even I, his father, cannot get in to see him without a pass?"

When Mr. Gibson reported the matter to Governor Chambers the latter stated that it had already qeen brought to his notice, and that he sincerely regretted that the young man had been subjected to such treatment. He added that he had taken the guard on duty at the time to task, and had given orders which would prevent a recurrence of the action objected to by Mr. Gibson.

Promised Investigation.

Judge Winchester promised Mr. Gibson this morning that there would be an investigation.

PEOPLE FAIL TO LEARN BIG LESSON OF NIAGARA'S TOLL

Two Boys Lives Needlessly Sacrificed to Lack of Interest in Protection

Niagara Falls, June 24. — That the people of the two cities by the Falls failed to learn their lessons from the ice bridge tragedy of February 4, 1912, when three lives were snuffed out in the whirlpool and provide a means of saving the lives of those who might be caught in the waters of the lower river, is to-day admitted by city officials and others alike. That several different means of saving life might have been installed on the lower river, is also admitted. The lives of Donald Roscoe and Hubert Moore were needlessly sacrificed to a lack of interest in protecting life in hazardous places.

"It is useless to try to keep boys from water as it is to expect flies to stay at a lump of exposed sugar," saiht Mayor William Laughlin, of this city, as he was signing his name to two letters addressed respectively to representatives, Robert H. Cittins, and Charles B. Smith, at Washington, in which he asked that these two men use their influence in securing an appropriation to establish some sort of a life-saving station in the lower river.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Fair and about the same temperature.

FAMOUS DANCER GIVES COMPLEXION SECRETS

(Aileen Moore in Beauty's Mirror)
(Aileen Moore in Beauty's Mirror.)

I've learned the secret of Dolores' entrancing beauty—the wondrous charm that has dazzled the courts of Europe and captivated vast audiences everywhere. The famous dancer abhors rouges and cosmetics. Yet, despite the strenuousity of her life, she retains the incomparable complexion best described as "indescribable." An intimate friend tells me the senorita regularly uses on her face what druggists know as mercolized wax. This is applied at night in the manner cold cream is used and washed off in the morning. It absorbs the dead particles of skin which daily appear, and a fair, soft, fresh, girlish complexion is always in evidence.

Dolores' skin is not marred by a single wrinkle, not even the finest line. She wards these off by daily bathing her face in a solution made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half-pint witch hazel. As yous drugstores keep these ingredients as well as mercolized wax (one ounce of the wax is sufficient), no doubt your readers will welcome this information.

"Yes, this looks like the real thing."

WRECK VICTIMS NOT IMPROVING

Daughters of Northern Ontario Legislator Hurt in Wreck, in Serious Condition.

North Bay, June 24.—The condition of the two older daughters of Mr. Henry Morell, M.P.P. for Nipissing, hurt in a train wreck near Mattawa was still uncertain to-day. They were returning from a convent to attend their father's wedding, set for next Monday. It was feared at first that they would die.

The others reported to be injured are the younger Miss Morell, Miss Lillian Payette, of North Bay, Alois Hennessy, shoe traveller and Chief of Police Milroy of Mattawa. The injured were all taken to the hospital at Mattawa, and are being cared for there. They were reported to-day to be doing as well as could be expected.

Later in the morning it was learned that the younger Miss Morell was terribly injured. She lies unconscious.

Her injuries necessitated the amputation of one leg. She will hardly recover. She was crushed beneath one of the cars which had to be lifted before she could be attended to and she suffered greatly from shock and loss of blood.

STEAMER IS TIED UP HERE

Tug, Not Licensed for Passengers Brings Passengers From Hastings No Qualified Officers on Board

Down at the local lock floats is a steamboat that is alleged to have broken a law passed to protect passengers aboard such (or rather other) craft.

On Monday Collector of Customs Robert Hall, received a telephone message stating that a tug named the "Winnette" had brought up a number of passengers from Hastings and that the Winnette, though not registered to carry passengers had neither qualified captain or engineer aboard. The collector of customs got busy at once and dispatched an officer to investigate. We are informed that the result of the officer's investigation proved that the charges, as laid, were correct. The local Customs Officers were impelled by law to tie the boat up awaiting instructions from Ottawa. At the last report obtainable, the Winnette is still bound to the dock by, not Government red tape, but by a rope hitched by the local Customs House officials.

It will be remembered by our older citizens that some twenty odd years ago, the steamer "Golden Eye" was tied up by a former local Collector of Customs for a somewhat similar offense, when she had several hundred passengers from Cobourg, via the old Harwood and Cobourg railway aboard. However, the then Collector of Customs managed, by constant and persistent use of the telegraph wires to Ottawa, to have the steamer released late in the afternoon.

BUTCHER KNIVES IN A ROW ON LAKE LINER

Brockville, June 24.—Butcher knives flashed on the steamer Toronto, when the chef and the butcher undertook to settle an old feud yesterday, thortly before the steamer docked at Brockville. The incident occurred in the kitchen and before the men could be separated, both were badly slashed. The chef was stabbed in three places—the abdomen breast and shoulder, but none of his wounds will prove serious. Captain Redfern intends taking action against the law-breakers on reaching Prescott.

TENDERS FOR ST. PAVING TO BE INVITED AT ONCE

City Council Will Get Busy on This Work This Year---Not Likely That Oil Will be Used on Any Streets This Season--May Soon Have a Sprinkler on the Car Tracks

The City Fathers met in special session last night. There were present Mayor W. H. Bradburn, Aldermen McIntyre, Anderson, Johnston, G. Walter Green, Duffus, Gillespie, Duncan, and Buller.

On motion of Ald. Anderson and Duncan, a cheque for $3,500 will be issued to the DeLaval Co. as the city's share, under agreement, of the company's moving expenses to this city.

City Engineer R. H. Parsons recommended that three men be engaged to keep the centre of the city clear of grass, stones, and rubbish. The Engineer and chairman of the Board of Works were invested with power to act on this question.

Mr. J. C. Shookjs proposition that the Lakefield dam be acquired by the city for Hydro-Electric purposes will be forwarded to the Hydro-Electric Commission.

r. Dumble wrote that a building is being erected on city property on Rubidge street, between London and McDonnel streets, and suggested that such unwarranted encroachment on the street line be stopped.

Ald. Johnston offered that one building has already been constructed on the street line in this neighborhood, and said he felt like recommending that Rubidge street be opened up. People should be given to understand that buildings erected on the street line on reservation streets not yet opened up must come down. This matter was sent to the Board of Works.

Objects to Erection of Store.

A deputation waited upon Council with a view to securing a by-law to prohibit the erection of stores on Sharlotte street, west of Park. The building of a store up to the street line at the north-east side of St. Joseph street is under contemplation hence the request. All the residents on Charlotte street, from Park to the boundary have signed a petition to the same effect. Mr. C. S. Hetherington offered that it is R. C. Braund who contemplates building a store at the point in question.

This matter was referred to the City Solicitor, who will report to the Board of Works to-morrow on the city's authority to prohibit by by-law the erection of stores on streets practically built up.

To Street Pave at Last.

The City Engineer was authorized to advertise for tenders for paving with bithulitic pavement George street from Murray to King; Charlotte street, from George to Bethune, and concrete pavement on Hunter street, from George to Aylmer.

The Hunter section will be paved with concrete as an experiment, the pavement will be laid a grade lower than George street, so that it may be topped with Bithulitic or some other material should the concrete not stand the wear and tear.

Annexation By-law.

A by-law approving of the registration of that portion of the Hatton property, now known as the Victoria Heights passed its several readings. This is the preliminary proceeding necessary for annexing the property in question to the city.

Street Railway Sprinkler.

Mr. Munro, manager of the street railway, is preparing a proposition for putting a sprinkler on the rails to water the streets over which the street cars run. This proposition will be ready in ten days.

It is not likely that any streets will be oiled this year. It looks as though the oil must be bought in car lots at a cost of $750, and it is not quite clear where the money is to come from this year for that purpose.

The Thursday Half Holiday.

The request of the retail merchants for permission to string a banner across the street advertising the Thursday half holiday was re-opened, but no action was taken. Council did not think it fair to some industrial sections of the community to too publicly advertise the half holiday to out-of-town residents.

HEIR TO BRITISH PEERAGE TO LEAVE LEAVENWORTH PEN

Death of Brother Made Him Sir Frederic Grey--Used Mail To Defraud

Leavenworth, Kan., June 24.—"No. 1437," who will be released from the federal prison here on Monday, is really Sir Frederico Grey, heir to a British peerage. He succeeded to it through the death of his elder brother since he has been in prison. He will have the larger title and the estate that goes with it at the death of his father, who is now sixty-eight.

Grey was sent to prison from Washington on March 16, 1911, to serve three years for using the mails to defraud in connection with the exploitation of a large tract of land in Mexico which he claimed to own. He had previously served a term in an English prison. But instead of being deported to England he will be sent to Mexico, in consequence of an arrangement between his attorneys at the trial and the federal law officers.

The family from which Grey comes dates back to the early part of the sixteenth century. His succession to the title follows the death of two older brothers within the past seven months. One of the brothers was a canon of Manchester Cathedral and rector of Ruthyn. Prior to 1694 the family was known as Grey de Denton, and subsequently as Grey de Denton, and Ruthin, but following 1768 the name was changed to Edgerton de Gray, which, in late years has been changed to Edgerton Grey. Edgerton is a village in Lancashire. The names of Ruthyn and Benton are also taken from adjoining villages.

He says, however: "I shall still be a poor man when I return home, for I do not yet know whether my brother has left me a shilling."

BERLIN NINE TAKES ANOTHER GAME FROM LUCKLEES PETES

The Petes lost again yesterday to Berlin by the score of 5—1. This game was hard fought, until the last, neigther team loosening up just a little bit, but a few errors at the finish proved too much for the luckless Petes and they fell down to the visitors.

The weather was all that could be desired, and the fans turned out in good numbers to cheer the boys along to victory, but the jinx is still hanging round the locals.

To-day's game promises to be a whirlwind exhibition and no doubt the fans have not lost heart, and will be seen as usual on the grounds to-day.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaprilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaprilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., [illegible] George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

RUSH FOR WEALTH

Broker's Failure in Business Leads to Happiness Through Strange Inheritance.

By GERTRUDE MARY SHERIDAN.

Warren Talcott took a last look at the long counting room that had once been his, but was so no longer. Some men were erasing the sign, "Talcott & Co., Stocks and Bonds," from the glittering plate glass windows. He passed the elevator starter, who halted him by gently catching his arm.

"I've heard of it, Mr. Talcott," he said, his voice quivering. "Sir, my wife didn't sleep all night over it. She says there's a room for you under the roof you helped us save all your life long, if you'll take it."

"Thank you," nodded the broker. "Tell your wife it's such people as you that make a man think there's some good in the world."

Men turned and noted the tall, graceful figure as Talcott passed. There was always something royal in his bearing. Even with "Failure" written that day against his business career, a dauntless courage showed in his kindly, steady eye.

A bootblack whom he had started in business ran after him, winning the ever indulgent smile of the generous broker.

"Mr. Talcott," he said hurriedly, "I've got a savings bank book that says three hundred dollars. I want to loan it out, you see—"

"I see you are a good, loyal friend," interrupted Talcott, placing a gentle hand on the shoulder of the grateful cripple.

The speaker walked rapidly from the business center. Finally he sought the most secluded corner of an humble restaurant and sat down—to think.

Frame and face relaxed as he drew out his pocket book. It contained only a few dollars, all that was left of a magnificent fortune. His mind ran back over the past few months. He recalled the warning of his doctor—overwork. He remembered how he had one day given a wrong order. Another when the floor of the stock exchange had gone all black before him, and he had made a confused error in business judgment and lost over two hundred thousand dollars. Then the verdict of the doctor, nervous collapse, and now—the crash.

"You Are Almost Rich Again."

Anyhow, he had paid dollar for dollar. He tried to think of hard work, a constitution rebuilt, but never again the mad rush for wealth, holding in the end only bitter dust and blight.

Talcott had brought half a dozen letters from the office. He opened them in turn. Five were of no consequence. The last one startled him. It announced that an old pensioner of his, James Gregory, living in another city, had died leaving him his entire estate—"apply at once to Dockkery & Bates, attorneys."

Twenty-four hours later the senior member of that firm escorted the broker to a secluded city court. In the center of a vacant lot stood a large covered wagon. It had windows like a house and was divided into three living compartments. Seated on the grass reading from school books were three small boys. Near by was a young lady of about eighteen. She was sewing and four little girls were copying her industry.

"Mr. Gregory has left you two horses and that wagon, with all hands included," said the lawyer, grimly. "In addition, here is the deed already recorded in your name, to a six hundred and forty acre tract of wild land a hundred miles from here, up near the pineries."

"And this is my legacy!" murmured the perplexed Talcott.

"Exactly. Miss Gregory will explain the details," and the lawyer left him.

Talcott advanced towards the young lady and introduced himself. He fancied he had never seen so kindly and peaceful a face. Her simple story was soon told. Her dead father, an eccentric, had taken in charge, gradually, some homeless orphans. For them and herself he had worked, traveling about the country in the wagon and doing odd jobs as a tinker.

When the broker asked her as to her plans for the future, she only looked helplessly and pathetically at him.

Warren Talcott did some thinking. Then, as if he had suddenly and refreshingly come to the threshold of an odd, new, inspiring life, he realized that his pensioner had made him his legatee, confident that his old friend would work out the problem aright.

They talked for over an hour. Bluntly Talcott told of his real situation. He suggested a plan. He needed rest, a change, the doctors had said. Here it was, ready made to order. They would go to "the farm," as he called it. It was their only tangible inheritance. He went away for a time, sold his watch and other jewelry, handed a roll of bills to Miss Gregory, and said:

"There is room for me with the boys. You must be the purse bearer and housekeeper. The motive of your father's life was to save these poor little outcasts. It is a noble purpose. I shall try to continue his plan."

Talcott went to sleep that night feeling the great load of a broken past lifted from his mind. The odd, the new, the unknown life attracted him.

He awoke with a headache the next morning. The reaction had come. By noon he had a fever, by nightfall he was delirious.

For him the next twenty days were a blank. He awoke to find himself, weak and emaciated, lying on a bed in the boys' end of the wagon. He glanced from the window. As far as his eyes could reach was a level emerald stretch—grass, flowers, trees everywhere.

Outside two of the boys were carrying a pail of water. They passed out of sight around to the other side of the wagon. From that direction there came the clang—clang of metal sounds. Talcott tried to arise. He sank back weakly with a groan. Instantly from the wagon living room a light form came into view. It was Miss Gregory.

Wonder-eyed and grateful, Talcott learned how the brave little woman had nursed him, had carried out the plan of the journey to "the farm." Here they were, the children industrious and happy, and oh! such grand fortune, and her eyes danced as she told him of it.

"A railroad is building right through your section," she explained, "and the wagon stands on the new town site. A man has been here daily to see you about selling him some of the property."

The man appeared next day. He looked Talcott over shrewdly. Then he said:

"I see you are a keen business man, so I'll talk sense. I am a land speculator. I'll give you ten thousand dollars for a quarter section, and fifty per cent. of what I make on another quarter section selling town lots."

"You mean," replied the broker, gently, "twenty thousand dollars and seventy-five per cent."

"I guess I've figured wrong," said the speculator. "You're up to snuff. Well, I'm ready to trade."

"And what is your plan now, Mr. Talcott?" asked the motherly guardian of the little coterie of children a few days later. "You are almost rich again."

"I shall build a nice roomy home," answered Talcott, "and we will all grow up with the country. My dear, good nurse and true friend, I have found hope and ambition where I thought there was nothing but despair. I have found love, too. Will you share the new home, as my wife?"

And when the blushing, lovable Audrey Gregory answered "Yes," Warren Talcott felt that he stood at the portal of a veritable Eden.

FATIGUE A DISEASE

London Physician Thinks New Energizing Panacea May be Found

That "good old age" is both more prevalent and more enjoyable than it was forty years ago, was the cheerful view expressed by Sir James Goodhart in a speech to the Royal College of Physicians at London.

Sir James, however, confessed that finality in pathology had not yet been reached, and among the tasks which yet confounded them was the discovery of a remedy for fatigue which was nowadays a disease.

What was more common, he asked, than to meet a man or woman who is "so tired, always tired?"

It was clear, he said, that what was required was a fresh stock of some form of energy for charging up the machine. That they were, as yet, unable to supply. So far away was it, and yet perhaps so nigh. It did not seem to be inexorably beyond the knowledge of the future.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Liberals have apparently a bad conscience over the action of the Senate in killing the Naval Bill. They are still apologizin for the Upper House.

The Borden Government seems likely to go down in history as one which deemed it a duty to carry out its pledges. That kind of a Government is somewhat of a novely for Canada.

There are said to be over 2,500 profane expressions in the English language, which probably accounts for the difficulty some men have in emphatically expressing their feelings on certain occasions.

President James, of the University of Illinois, told a graduating class of three hundred young women that marriage was better than a career. He apparently overlooked the fact that often marriage is a career, and a very stormy one at that.

WHERE CANADA STANDS

The position of the Liberal party on the navy question is frankly put by the Winnipeg Free Press, the chief Liberal organ in Western Canada. With extreme candour the Free Press says: "The Liberal position is that the Canadian Government and the Canadian Gonernment and the Canadian Pbrliament should decide whether Canada should fight in the Empire wars." This is the same spirit of separation which was manifest in the Laurier speeches. The issue according to the Free Press is whether Canada is of the Empire or not. Borden says that when the Empire is at war Canada is at war and it must be evident to any novice that we cannot both within the Empire and without it.

THE FARMERS' BANK SUFFERERS.

The Borden Government will introduce legislation next session to relieve the Farmers' Bank sufferers. The case of this notorious failure is unique in the banking history of Canada. The bank was a long time in starting, for the reason that the necessary backing Uas difficult to obtain. The Minister of Finance at that time, Hon. W. S. Fielding was so impressed with the slowness of the promoters that he protested against the reneUal of the charter. Yet when the time came for him to issue the certificate without which the Bank could not do business, despite the fact that he had been warned by responsible persons that the preliminary financing was not being done in a lawful way, he issued the certificate. The bank thereupon started on its disastrous career.

The wreck of the institution wiped out all that the depositors and shareholders had put into it and sent the general manager to the penitentiary. The Royal Commission appointed by the present Government to investigate the wreck found that the certificate had been obtained by fraud, and that the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Fielding, and the other members of the Treasury Board ought to have investigated the charges of fraud made to them before itsuing the certificate. They didn't do it.

What Mr. Fielding did was to ask the man who was perpetrating the fraud if everything was all right. The assurance of Travers was enough for Fielding. As a result the bank opened its doors and the depositors lost their money. The Borden Government having regard to all these conditions, has decided to grant to the sufferers a reasonable measure of relief. This will be done next session.

Headache Over The Eyes? Look for Nasal Catarrh

Catarrh Never Stops in One Place—It Spreads Rapidly—Often Ruins Health Completely.

In this changeable climate it is the little colds that drift into Catarrh. Unless the inflammation is checked it passes rapidly from the throat or nose to the bronchial tubes and then to the lungs. You can't make new lungs any more than you can make new fingers or toes, but you can cure catarrh.

The surest cure consists of breathing in the healing balsamic essences of CATARRHOZONE, which is simply a medicated vapor so full of rich curative properties that every trace of Catarrh vanishes before it.

"The soothing piney vapor of Catarrhozone is the most powerful medicine I ever used," writes Mrs. Edmond J. Christine, of Saskatoon. "Every breath drawn through the Inhaler sends a grateful feeling through the air passages of the nose and throat. Catarrhozone cured me of frightful headaches over the eyes, relieved me of a stuffy feeling in the nose, and an irritable hacking cough that had been the bane of my life for a year. My general health is greatly improved, my appetite and digestion are considerably better than before. Catarrhozone has been the means of giving me such health as I always desired, but never possessed."

Even though catarrh has a firm hold on you, and affects your throat, nose or ears, you can thoroughly cure it with Catarrhozone. Large size, guaranteed, costs $1.00; smaller size 50c.; sample size 25c. All storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

HOW ELEPHANTS SLEEP

In One Sense Are Lightest Sleepers—Seldom Lie Down

Whether elephants ever lie down is a question which nature students are in doubt about. One authority, Gordon Cumming, made known the fact that at one time he thought he had found evidence in marks on the ground that the bulls of one herd did stretch themselves out at full length for a few hours' rest at about midnight, but says Harper's Weekly, he contended that the young and the cows always remained on their feet.

Another authority, Selous, has expressed doubt whether even the old bulls lie down. He tells of one herd that was known to have kept moving and feeding throughout the twenty-four hours. "Except when rolling in mud and water," he says, "it is likely that an African elephant never lies down during his whole life."

However this may be, the most competent authorities seem to agree that this animal sleeps less and more lightly than any other. J. L. Kipling, the father of the writer, has estimated the period of slumber taken standing up to average about four hours in the twenty-four, and his estimate has been employed by the son in an amusing passage for one of his stories, "Moti Guj," wherein the sleep of the elephant is represented as consisting of an hour's fidgeting on one side and a similar period on the other, followed throughout the rest of the night "by long low, rumbling soliloquies."

ALASKA DOGS

Some time between April 1 and 15 when winter is beginning to relax its iron grip on Alaska, anywhere from a dozen to a score of dog teams will start from Nome over a dreary dog team racecourse of 404 miles, and the one that crosses the finish line first will receive $10,000 and a five hundred dollar loving cup. The team that finishes second wins $5,000 for its driver, while the third prize is half that amount. Occasionally there is a fourth prize, the hardships endured by the contestants and the weather conditions governing this award. Every man that enters the contest realizes he is flirting with death, and it is this risk that adds to the interest.

Every team has its admirers and a great deal of money changes hands on the result. Save for a stretch of thirty-six miles, says E. R. Hinman, an Arctic explorer, the course lies through a barren, treeless waste and the contestants are compelled to cross a mountain range twice—going and coming—before the end of the journey. Loose, dry snow covers the course and the entire country as far as the eye can reach. Kept in a constant swirl by the bitter Arctic winds, it blinds dogs and drivers and compels them to stagger along and trust to luck. The trail is staked with bits of bunting, but the shifting snow frequently buries these guides and the teams wander around aimlessly for hours at a time. Leaving Nome the first fifty-two miles of the journey lie across the ice of Bering Sea. Candle, 202 miles away, is the turning point. Every precaution is taken to see that the race is honestly run. Each driver is photographed with his team at the starting point and he must bring under the finish wire all the dogs with which he starts, dead or alive. The receipt of any assistance on the journey disqualifies him and he must have all his dogs with him every foot of the journey. At Candle each outfit is photographed again and the pictures must correspond. The race is a go as you please affair, the teams being started within fifteen minutes of one another. There are nine dogs to a team. Most of the animals are the native dogs of Alaska, but occasionally there are teams of Siberian hounds and bird dogs in the trace. Teams composed of the latter breed won first and second prize five years ago, and that race was run under conditions that make it the most famous in the history of the event. Soon after the start a blizzard sets in which continued for two days, and it was feared that all the contestants had perished. The winning team covered the 404 miles in 61 hours 7 minutes and the actual travelling time, after allowing for brief rests, was 42 hours 16 minutes an average speed of 9¼ miles an hour.

Non-Productive Areas

Professor C. A. Zavitz, Guelph, in the course of an address, said that Canadian agriculture was showing more and more the effects of the work of a well educated and highly intellectual people. Turning to the high cost of living he said this was due in no small measure to the prevailing practice of few men operating farms of large area. The increase in the number of people engaging in non-productive occupations must necessarily be accompanied by a higher market price for products of the farm. It would be much better for the people themselves, the city and the country if many at present living in Canadian cities were back on the farms.

Whiskey in the Cradle

The eight-months-old child of Joe Peloni, Cobalt, cost his parents a $100 fine. Provincial Constable Jerry Lefebvre was pretty sure that Peloni had whiskey on the premises, so when he searched the house he did not leave many places without scrutiny. Still he did not suspect that the firewater was in the cradle till he heard the frolicsome youngster crow and kick, and he heard the familiar clink under the blankets. Then he inserted his hand in spite of the woman's screams, and found three bottles snugly concealed under Baby's legs.

Two Whoppers

A pedigree greyhound, which attempted to keep pace with a fast train in which its master was travelling from South Norwalk, Connecticut, is reported to have run alongside the coach for a mile, but fallen dead from exhaustion after covering six miles. This, however, isn't nearly such a good story as that about the man who, falling from a steamer as it left Glasgow for New York, boldly swam after it and, dripping wet, managed to land at New York along with the other passengers.

A Mean Thief

There are some mean thieves in this world. A London man dropped dead just after handing his wages, amounting to $16, to his wife. Several neighbors afterwards called to condole with her, and when the last of them had gone it was found that the money too had disappeared.

Early Egg Laying

Devonshire bee-keepers are said to be alarmed at early egg-laying activity of queen-bees. Many poultry keepers would be glad to get such a surprise from their female stock.

Saved by Sausages

A Paris burglar has been saved by sausages. In his effort to escape the police he fell from a sixth-storey window, but landed safely on a heap of the savoury links being prepared by the butcher.

When Campbell objects

A minister named Campbell confesses that he does not mind his parishioners misspelling his name, but takes the hump when they indulge in the orthographic eccentricity of "Camel."

Quick Movement

A marine who had been injured in a gun explosion was asked to describe what happened. "Well," he replied, "I was standing beside the gun, there was an awful racket, and the doctor said, 'Sit up and take this.'"

The Poet of the Racecourse

Life is mostly froth and bubble,
Two things stand like stone:
Kindness in another's trouble,
Courage in your own.

WHIRLWIND COURSE OF PARIS BANDITS

How a Gang of Criminals Operated in the French Capital—The Real Villain in the Case

Four Parisian bandits were sent to the guillotine, and another batch went to prison. Carrouay, one of the most desperate of the desperate band, committed suicide in his cell after being sentenced to prison. Three others died "with their boots on" in resisting arrest. The demand of Paris that she be avenged upon the murderers who terrorized her for more than a year was thus met. At the trial it was made reasonably plain that these twenty odd criminal or desperate men, or crazy men, and the equal number of women who loved them or protected them or helped them, according to the intelligence of the women, were inspired by a woman. Her name describes her. It is Rirette, which means Little Laugh. She is always laughing, is Anne Maitrejean; laughing at the judge, at the crowds in the court room, at the prisoners, at law and everything else.

Breeding the Bandits

She and her husband, Kilbalchiche, provided the centre round which the terrible bandits performed their death's dance. How they first met the leaders of the bandits is not clear, but it is plain that Garnier, Carrouay, Dieudonne, Monier and Raymond used to visit Rirette and her husband and discuss anarchy with them. They were, in fact, taught anarchy by the slim laughing woman, and after they had mastered the general principles, which were very agreeable to them, Rirette pointed out that they might put them in practice very easily. She taught them the "individual taking back" notion, as the Anarchists call it, or robbery, as the law calls it, and as they needed money, and were opposed to working hard for it, and had no such ideas of right and wrong as most people entertain there was nothing to check them but the absence of a good plan. It was Raymond who looked at the problem from a purely scientific point of view, and concluded that use should be made of these inventions of science, the automobile and the automatic pistol. Before the bandits became the automobile bandits, however, they committed several burglaries to acquire the the necessary technical experience. According to the diary of Garnier, these jobs netted them from $60 to $80 each. Then at the right moment, after the brilliant idea of Raymond's had been discussed, Rirette introduced to them Bonnot, the incomparable chauffeur. Having Bonnot and the automatic pistols, the next thing was to secure the car.

Crimes of the Bandits

They marked down a likely car and stole it. Then they hid it for a week, and in the meantime picked out their victim, who was a bank runner, with $1,100 in cash and securities amounting to $64,000 in his satchel. They shot him down in the street and escaped with the plunder. The abandoned auto was found next day at Dieppe. There was no clue to the robbers, who separated, some going to Belgium to negotiate the securities and the robbers returning to Paris. Their next robberies were committed upon stores dealing in firearms, and they secured a valuable haul of pistols, rifles and ammunition. Other crimes followed with stirring rapidity. With Bonnot at the wheel of a powerful car it was possible to murder a man in the morning and in the afternoon assassinate another man a couple of hundred miles away. The bandits appeared to be without fear, and the knowledge that they would rather kill than not helped them out of many a tight hole.

Their reign of terror lasted probably fifteen months. Well equipped with money, with disguises and false documents and passports and accomplices, they eluded pursuit for so long, but at length the coils were tightened round them. An indiscreet letter led to the capture of a couple, and supplied a clue to some of the others. The time came when they were known, when it was no longer a matter of hunting men the police would not recognise unless they saw them committing a crime. The cordon closed in. Several were captured; others were shot down. A regiment of soldiers shelled the house where Bonnot turned at bay, and he was destroyed. When Paris saw the others in the dock, she was amazed. They were all mere youngsters, none of them out of the twenties. They are of two kinds, the "tough" and the "dude," and of the two the dude was the deadlier. Most remarkable of all was Rirette, who taught them crime and incited them to murder. She was permitted to go her laughing way.

Mexican Idea of News

Mexico, despite its revolutions, is one of the most conservative countries in the world. Few of the poorer people can read or write, and the "public newspaper reader" makes a comfortable living by going the round of the drinking places of the city and reciting the news of the day. News, however, is generally stale before it reaches print in a Mexican paper. "Good news," said one Mexican editor to a traveler, "is like good wine; it improves with age. It is always better to hold news over for a week. If it is true, we get more facts; if it proves false, why should we print it?"

Ended Appropriately

The Scottish National Song Society Conference in Edinburgh was in a slanging mood. The Free Church hymn-book was designated the most awful conglomeration of nonsense, and the bagpipe stigmatised as the instrument of barbarians. Appropriately enough, the conference wound up with a lament.

Careless Writers

The worst and most careless of all writers are said to be college professors, doctors, ministers of religion, and professional artists.

Watch on the Wrist

It is stated that, as a general thing, the kind of man who wears a watch on his wrist doesn't need all his pockets to carry his money in.

German Cigarettes

The consumption of cigarettes in Germany has doubled in the last four years.

Death on Grasshoppers

Receiving power from a gasoline engine, a machine invented by a California man draws grasshoppers into a cage by suction as it is driven through his vineyard.

Those Hat Pins

Munich policemen and street car conductors are provided with protectors which, at their direction, they may attach to the dangerous ends of women's hat pins.

"Hard Work"

"Hard work is beneficial," says a physician. Of course it is—if the other fellow does not charge us too much for doing it.

Leather Casters

Many furniture casters are being made from leather by cutting disks of the required size, and cementing them together to form the wheel, which is then put into a lathe and turned until the face of the wheel is rounded. Disks of metal, fastened to each side of the wheel provide bearings for the axle that runs through the wheel. This type of caster is made for use on hardwood floors, and casters of compressed felt are also manufactured for the same purpose. Other styles of casters include those of glass, designed for the purpose of insulation and ball-bearing casters having no wheel, but a ball that revolves on a circle of smaller balls.

DIABETES CURED —THE PROOF

We have proof of cases of Diabetes that have been cured by SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES when the patient had been a sufferer from the disease for fifteen (15) years. This remedy is particularly efficacious in cases in which open wounds, add to the sufferings of the patient. It has cured the most stubborn cases after all the usual remedies and diets have signally failed.

We have scores of confidential letters from grateful patients who have found relief in Sanol's Anti-Diabetes. These letters do not comes from people in distant parts, but from residents of western cities and towns. They are convincing.

—Sanol's Anti-Diabetes is no common remedy—it is different from the usual—it is a specific and scientific remedy, prepared for the relief and cure of one disease and one only.

A well-known Government official of British Columbia (whose name will be given in confidence) writes us that on June 12th he commenced the use of SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, and that on June the 18th his urine was free of sugar. To prove that wonderful statement he sent us the certificates of the chemist's analysis. "The result," he says, "I regard as highly gratifying."

MOTOR BOATS

New York, June 24.—The motorboat Tocsam, owned by William Mulford of Ocean City, N.J., crossed the fish line off Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, at 4.02 a.m., winning the Crescent Athletic Club trophy for a return race from Bermuda. The Barbara II. crossed the finish line at 9.24 o'clock last night. The two boats, having completed in the Philadelphia-Bermuda race left Hamilton for the return at 6.27 Tuesday evening. The Dream, winner of that race, did not participate in the return contest.

New York, June 24.—The motor boat Barbara II. crossed the finish line off Bay Ridge, Brooklyn at 9:25 o'clock this evening, the first to finish of the the entrants in the race from Bermuda.

Boston, June 24.—The Raksha, believed to be the fastest boat in New England, was built for C. W. Baird by F. B. Hayes of Bar Harbor, and will be entered in regattas on Lake Sunapee and Lake Winnipesaukee this summer. This boat, recently tried out, developed speed of about 13 miles an hour. She was designed by the Smith-Ryan Company and is equipped with a 55-horsepower Sterling motor. The Raksha is 20 feet long and 4.5 feet beam and, in type, resembles the Baby Reliance hydroplane. She will be shipped to Lake Sunapee, where Mr. Baird already has a fleet of fast boats, in a few days.

BASEBALL.

Chattanooga, Tenn., June 24.—President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, stated today that Third Baseman Jimmy Gillespie, who was struck in the head by a pitched ball by Hargrove, of Birmingham, will be released outright with full pay for the remainer of the season as soon as consent is received from the other clubs of the league. At present the injured third sacker is upon the ineligible list.

Superior, Wis., June 24.—"Ruqe" Schauer, the sensational pitcher of the Superior club of the Northern League, Wednesday was sold to the New York National for $10,000, delivery to be made August 15.

Schauer has pitched three one-hit games this year and was robbed of a no-hit performance by a scratch with two out in the ninth inning.

Chicago, June 24.—Third Baseman "Heine" Zimmerman will not lose his chances of winning $100 as a result of his dispute with Manager Evers of the Chicago National League club at St. Louis today. The donor of the $100 declared tonight he did not consider that Zimmerman had lost his chance for the bill, and said he would stick to the words of his offer, that Zimmerman should receive the money unless put out of the game by an umpire for disputing him.

RING.

Springfield, Mo., June 24. — The officials of the German American Bank at Los Angeles have refused to relinquish $8,000 deposited there by Luther McCarty, the pugilist, killed at Calgary.

Attorney Patterson, retained by the estate, said the bank's action was due to the county officials' desire to collect a collateral inheritance tax.

THE FAMILY CAPITAL

Health the Most Important Factor of Everyday Life

Every wife ought to feel it her duty to take the best possible care of the family capital. The money? Oh, yes, that is the family capital in one sense of course. But in a broader, bigger sense, isn't the true capital of the average family the health of the earner of the income? There are few houses comparatively speaking, where the daily needs are brought from the proceeds of invested money. They are ~~the outcome of invested labor—labor~~ that, to bring in the money regularly, must be reinvested steadily day after day.

Few wives seem to understand this fact quite as fully as they ought. They are apt to use their capital a bit recklessly, making it work for cash returns all day down town, and then forcing it in extra use for social display during the evening. Very little capital of any kind will stand a double strain. Money used for flowers and gowns is not apt to bring in interest for the purchase of the prosaic but necessary pot roast. And as the good housekeeper looks to the providing of household necessities before she spends money on luxuries, so the good wife will look to her husband's health and strength before she spends a bit of either in the acquiring of social pleasures.

The wage earner of a family is of necessity that family's greatest cash asset. It behooves the women of the house to see that he is able to do his best work, with his strength unencumbered by mortgages to lack of sleep, unnecessary weariness or nervous strain. The wage earner of the family is, from the very fact of his being the wage earner, the most important person in it.

It is the duty of his home partner to keep his machinery, both mental and physical, up to its very best mark, or everyone concerned may suffer in that most tender spot of modern anatomy—the pocketbook.

The Middle Child

Whenever there is company
And mother sends for us,
It's always 'bout the baby that
They make the biggest fuss
They say, "She's sweet as she can be!"
"Her hair, just see it curl!"
They never say such things to me,
'Cause I'm the middle girl.

And then they say to sister, "Why, is this the oldest child?
She'll be a woman by-and-bye!"
And after they have smiled
And held her hand, they look at me.
Mamma says, "She's begun
To lose her teeth," and then they laugh—
'Cause I'm the middle one!

Then baby speaks her little piece,
And sister's asked to sing;
But no one ever seems to guess
That I do anything.
Although my name is Marguerite—
'And Marguerite means "pearl,"
Nobody thinks that I'm sweet,
'Cause I'm the middle girl.

When I grow up, and when I have
A family of my own,
I'll send up for the middle girl
To come downstairs alone;
And I shall let her speak and sing
And have a lot of fun,
I'll not deny her anything
'Cause she's the middle one!

WOMEN WHO WORK

Nearly 650,000 women are employed in the factories of Russia.

Hamilton, Ontario, has a union composed of women bookkeepers.

The hotels and restaurants of Switzerland employ 33,529 female workers.

A number of women acted as judges and clerks at an election held at Portland, Oregon.

In Canada single women and widows have the municipal vote.

Several well known leaders of society in Paris appeared in public wearing sandals fastened around the ankles with ribbons, like the buskins of the ancient Greeks.

The Useful Sweater

Very attractive are the double sweaters, that is, the sweater knitted of worsted in two colors. The outside of the sweater is usually ribbed and is in white, but the lining is a plain loose stitch in some color, the color serving for the collar, cuffs and patch pockets. The finest of Shetland wool is used, and the effect is altogether dainty.

Another unusual sweater is the one which has collar and cuffs and pockets—if the sweater has patch pockets—of wool embroidery.

Still another sweater is the one of shaded worsted, the lighter shades appearing at the top and gradually working into a deep shade at the bottom of the garment, whatever its length.

SCIENCE OF BAKING AND BREAD MAKING

Why a Loaf is Rounded on Top and Some Developments While in the Oven

The time for the baking of a loaf of bread varies with the size and weight of the loaf, the process followed, and the kind of oven employed, as well as with the temperature. Small varieties, such as rolls and buns, require only a temperature of about 210 to 235 degrees and from 15 to 20 minutes for baking; the larger loaves will need an oven temperature ranging from 388 to 428 degrees and the time required will be from 30 to 40 minutes. Rye breads or the still heavier kinds, such as pumpernickle, require from 45 minutes to one and a half hours for perfect baking.

Although the temperature of the oven is between 300 and 400 degrees, the bread never reaches this heat. The crust, which is most exposed to the heat, attains a temperature of only 150 to 180 degrees; the high heat causes the outer covering of the loaf to caramelize. The processes going on inside the bread are about as follows: During baking the fermentation still continues and forms 42 degrees carbon dioxide gas, which raises the dough. At that heat the bacteria are able to live. The milk bacteria are still active at 50 degrees. As long as the micro-organisms in the dough are not killed, the dough is not considered matured.

Owing to the bottom of the oven being hotter, the lower part of the bread absorbs the heat more quickly and thereby builds up its crust, and at the same time checks the expansion of the gases. From the top, the pressure seems to be less effective. Because it requires longer to build up a solid crust under this influence, the enclosed gases are hindered in their effort to escape by the crust, which encloses. This results in a rounded top, the lower part on the flat bottom of the oven assuming the form of a solid foundation.

The ideal crust of a perfectly baked loaf of bread should possess the following characteristics: In form it should resemble a dome. Its color should be a golden brown. It should be elastic, not brittle, not too porous, but of good texture.

CARE OF FLOORS

Never Use Water on Waxed Floors—Wet Cloth For Paint

If one only knows how, nothing is easier than the care of a well finished floor. Water should never be used on a wax floor. The less water used on any floor the better. Painted, varnished and oiled floors may be cleaned with crude petroleum. Dip a woollen cloth in the petroleum and rub the boards with it. When the entire floor has been cleaned in this manner close the room for a few hours. Cover an old floor brush with a piece of clean woollen cloth and rub the floor hard. This will remove any superfluous oil, and polish the floor. Occasionally add half a pint of paraffine oil to each quart of petroleum. This will keep the floor in fine condition. It is most important that every particle of superfluous oil shall be removed in the manner I have indicated. If this is neglected many times the oil will hold the dust and you will soon have a dark dingy floor. Painted, varnished and oiled floors can be wiped with a cloth which has been wrung out of water. This will remove the dust, but will not add to the lustre. Waxed floors should be dusted with a soft cloth or dust mop. To remove dirt spots from such floors wipe with a cloth which has been dampened with turpentine. This will remove the wax, and it will then be necessary to go over the spots with a cloth slightly moistened with wax.

For Women Who Motor

Parasolettes are made for automobilists. They fold compactly into little leather tubes which can be stowed inconspicuously in door pockets or on the floor of the car. The parasolettes when open, are found to be fluffy with silk pinked ruffles. They are made with plain and strong wooden handles. With these and with a tight fitting hat such as all motorists now wear, and with a comfortable, all enveloping coat to ward off dust, cold and dampness, the woman motorist is no longer the inappropriately dressed person she was when motor cars first came in. Then women used to go for long spins with big hats perched uncertainly atop elaborate coiffures, with no protection to the face against dust or wind, and without the sensible coats which cover chest and throat that are now worn.

Grease on Floor

When you spill grease upon the floor, immediately pour cold water upon it. This cools it before it can strike into the wood.

THRIFT IN FARMING

Too Much Land Taken up in Roads and Fencing

An agricultural writer says that the country roads are too wide; that 220 acres in each township is devoted to roads which if made into a farm would yield some one a comfortable income. He says farmers should set their fences out twelve and one-half feet. Upon this the Emporia Gazette makes the comment that farmers do not utilize all the land they have enclosed. There are, it says, numerous and sundry patches which, if cultivated, would add materially to his income. "Suppose he gets after those wastes before he goes in for turning the beautiful wide lanes of the prairies into mere courts."

Both these suggestions are signs of a change in agricultural methods. In the United States, as in Canada, farming has been done with careless prodigality. For this the farmer is not to be blamed. There was plenty of land, and therefore, no apparent need to husband its resources or restore its fertility. In the early history of the United States, the farmer moved from place to place, tapping the wealth of new regions, very much as miners flock to a district where gold has been discovered.

Although this involved waste, it was not altogether evil in its influence. It fostered the pioneer spirit, hastened the development of the country and the building of railways.

But now it is perceived that the resources of the country are not inexhaustible. Although all the land has not been occupied, there are no new and vast regions to attract the pioneer. Conservation of resources becomes a watchword. Desert lands are made fertile by irrigation. Attention is paid to the Southern States, which so long lay under the blight of slave labor.

In France every foot of soil is utilized, and wonderful results are achieved. A country not as large as Texas produces a third as much wheat as the United States, large quantities of other grains and roots, while there are nearly four million acres of vineyards yielding grapes which are manufactured into 627,000,000 gallons of wine. The whole country presents the appearance of a garden.

Of course the United States and Canada are a long way off from this stage of agricultural development, which is due partly to thrift, partly to necessity. But we are bound to move in that direction.—The Star.

Cat-like Animal

A huge cat-like animal was killed recently on the bush farm of Joseph Sauder, Puslinch Township, Ont., by Aaron Ziegler. It was discovered that some mirauding creature was stealing meat hung up in the kitchen, and a burrow under the building was accidentally disclosed, extending 100 yards back to the swamp. At the entrance to the burrow a dead-fall was set and worked to a charm. The captive animal was despatched with a crowbar. It was pronounced by Mr. Herbert Wales, Galt, taxidermist, to be a genuine catamount or mountain lion. It weighed 38 pounds and measured 5 feet 4 inches from nose to tail tip.

Tortoiseshell From Florida Coast

The finest of tortoiseshell is said to be that which comes from the Indian archipelago, although much of that obtained on the Florida coast is of the very best quality. There are three rows of plates on the back of the animal, called "blades" by the fishermen. In the central row are five plates, and in each of the others four plates, there are 25 small plates around the edges of the shell, known as "feet" or "noses." The biggest turtle does not furnish more than 16 pound of shell. Formerly the undershell was discarded as worthless, but now it is much esteemed for the delicacy of coloring. Sometimes imitation of tortoiseshell is made from the horns of cows.

Real Pearl Toilet Powder

Some of the most beautiful women of Europe use a face powder that is made from pearl dust; that is, real pearls ground to a powder, according to a current newspaper report. It is far more expensive than the so-called poudre de perles sold in shops, which is merely mother-of-pearl crushed. The real pearl powder originated in the East. At a certain pearl merchant's place in the Levant, several girls were employed to bore holes through the gems for the purpose of stringing. Some of the girls noticed that a few of their companions were acquiring brilliant complexions. For some time they could not induce them to tell what they were using, but at length the secret was out, and pearl powder thereafter became in great demand as a facial beautifier.

Poverty Unknown in Servia

Though the progress of Servia has been disappointing, said to be due in a considerable measure to the fact that the country has been afflicted with two native dynasties, yet poverty is almost unknown. The peasantry is prosperous, almost all being small land-owners and quite well-to-do.

Horse Nineteen Hands High

Battle Creek, Michigan, boasts a giant horse. It is 6 feet 4 inches high. It is seven years old and a good traveller, but no attempt will be made to mate it for double harness, for it would be a fruitless task.

Gas Men Killed

Four gas operators, all residents of Calgary, employed of the Western Canada Natural Gas Company, were asphyxiated in the Nanton Gas Plant. The men were sent down to Nanton to repair a leak in the pipes of the Nanton plant. With considerable difficulty nooses were passed over the bodies of the men and they were dragged out of the building. All were dead.

Memorial Stones

In every part of Palestine, along the roadside and in the fields, particularly on the hilltops, may be seen piles of stones, usually not over three feet high. If we should question a native about them he would tell us that they are "memorial stones" set up in recognition of some special providence of God. If we should examine the stones closely we would discover that they are blackened with oil, which indicates their sacredness, as they had been anointed. These stone heaps actually became objects of worship so common that Moses issued edicts against them. —Christian Herald.

An Eleven-Storey Liner

The Hamburg-American Company's new liner Imperator is the largest liner in the world. She is an eleven-storeyed floating palace, 710 feet long, with engines of 80,000 horse power. Her displacement is 50,000 tons, and she can accommodate 5,000 passengers. Among other luxuries the Imperator has been fitted with three electric lifts, winter garden, summer houses, theatres, gymnasium, Ritz restaurant, swimming baths, ballroom, telephones, "Cottage" cafe. The first class dining saloon in the Louis XVI. style is 300 feet long.

Whisky for Monkeys

Monkeys kept into captivity in the Zoo at Richmond, Indiana, are supplied with a drink of whisky every other day during the winter months, and their drink bill amounts to a considerable sum. The Zoo authorities say that the monkeys look for the whisky, which helps to keep them warm and in good health. It is now proposed to save money to the city by giving the monkeys all the whisky seized in raids on "shebeens."

Soil Fertilising in Denmark

According to a Consular report, the annual imports of artificial fertilisers to Denmark amounted to 300,000,000 pounds, with an estimated value of $2,700,000. The Danish Government makes about 1,500 experiments every year in different localities with fertilisers, thus teaching the farmers the scientific treatment of their land.

At the International Flower Show in London Canada and Australia were awarded blue ribbons in the form of large gold medals for the best collection of fruit.

A CITY WITH A PAST

Salonica Once a Kingdom and Scene of Labors of Apostle Paul

Salonica is one of the oldest cities in Europe, and bears the scars of a hundred wars in its ancient ruins and relics. It was built on the shores of the Aegean Sea near the site of the still more ancient Greek City of Therma, which derived its name from the neighboring hot springs. The founder of Salonica was Cassander, and it was named after his wife Thessalonica, the sister of Alexander the Great, in 315 B.C. The city rapidly became important both from a commercial and from a military point of view. There the Apostle Paul founded a flourishing Christian colony, to which the two epistles to the Thessalonians were written.

For two thousand years Salonica appears to have been more receptive of new ideas than most other cities, and becoming part of the Turkish Empire it enjoyed more freedom than any other Turkish city. It was in Salonica that the movement of the New Turks was cradled, if indeed it was not born there. It was in Paris that the first congress of the elements that were destined to overthrow Abdul Hamid was held, but some years before this Salonica had given birth to a "committee of liberty" that merged with the larger body.

Insurrection was no new thing for the citizens of Salonica, for in the fourth century it is recorded that 7,000 of them found guilty of rebellion were massacred by the Emperor Theodosius. In the seventh century the Macedonians sought to capture the city, but they found that the citizens of Salonica were stubborn fighting men and though the invaders were assisted by an earthquake, which threw the defenders into disorder, the attacks were repulsed with heavy loss.

More successful was the invasion of Stephen of Bulgaria, who forced Salonica to grant him many valuable trade concessions and other rights a couple of hundred years later. It is interesting to note that under this treaty, made a thousands years ago, Bulgaria still claims control of the city. There were several subsequent conquests, notably that of the Sicilian Normans in 1185. Later on the conqueror of Constantinople, Baldwin, conferred the city upon the Marquis of Montserrat, and in the transfer it is called a kingdom. The Marquis did not remain long in enjoyment of his toy crown, for shortly afterwards Theodore of Epirus acquired possession. Thereafter the title was bandied about among several royal houses, and gradually became extinct when the Turk became master of Macedonia.

To-day Salonica retains memorials of its former greatness in the form of some famous old buildings, nor is it without present-day importance since it has a population of 130,000. It is the terminus of four railroads, and has a commerce of $12,000,000 a year.

KING GEORGE'S KEYS

King George is not bothered with that bugbear of most men, a pocket bunch of keys. The only key which his Majesty carries about is one which opens the private writing desk in the library of each of the Royal residences, the several desks being all fitted with an identical lock. The key in question is quite a tiny one, and is attached to the end of the King's watch-chain, and worn in the waistcoat pocket.

His Majesty's private keys are kept in the writing desk in the King's own room wherever he may be staying. There are only eight in the bunch.

One locks or unlocks the bureau in the writing-room at Buckingham Palace, containing a number of the late King Edward's private papers; another gives access to a safe in which are kept books and documents relating to the most important private affairs of the Royal family; whilst a third opens the fireproof case containing the King's unique collection of postage stamps, the finest in the world.

No one ever handles these keys except his Majesty himself or his trusty private secretaries, Lord Knollys and Lord Stamfordham.

A USE FOR OLD PIANOS

Tribesman Who Converted it Into Bed

A Labrador tribe, it is said, made the barrels stolen from a wrecked whaler serve as chimney-tops; the West Indians utilized Timothy Dexter's warming pans for sugar ladles and the Shans find no worse use for English beer bottles than to stick them up as household gods to keep away evil spirits. But the drollest instance of converted usage occurred when that adventurous Frenchman, De Tonnant, while in Patagonia, gave an old chief a worn out grand piano which he had bought for eighty francs.

A few days after making this generous present, De Tonnant went one morning to pay an early visit to the Patagonian. He found him sleeping peacefully with his wife inside the piano, from which he had carefully removed sounding board, strings, etc., and which thus transformed constituted a not uncomfortable bedstead.

Result of a Spree

At Kilkelly, Ireland, a man named Thomas Cannors was prosecuted for cruelty to a cow and calf. Cannors, who lived by himself, left his house and went to England on a drunken spree, leaving the animals locked in a dwelling-house at home. He did not return for ten days. He stated that in consequence of his mother's death a short time ago he was very much upset. He went to the fair of Ballaghaderreen, where he got drunk. The magistrate took pity on him, advised him to get married, and let him off with a fine of 60 cents.

Ancestor of the Stewart Dynasty

A movement was started by the Edinburgh West Lothian Association in conjunction with the Stewart Society, for the purpose of raising a national memorial to Walter, Lord High Steward of Scotland, whose wife, the Princess Marjory, daughter of Robert the Bruce, was the mother of the boy who ultimately ascended the Throne of Scotland as Robert II. and first of the Royal House of Stewart. The promoters express the hope that something worthy of the heroic son-in-law of Bruce, and one of Scotland's noblest, yet least remembered heroes be erected.

INSIDE HISTORY OF BUNKER HILL GUN

It Was Taken to Quebec by Major Tapp Whose Grandfather Got it From British Government

Col. J. [illegible] Herbert Neilson, president of the Quebec Literary and Historical Society, tells the story of the Bunker Hill gun at Quebec [illegible] as follows:

"The real story of this piece of cannon appears to be unknown. I am one of the few remaining who know its history, and therefore feel justified in making the following statement concerning it:

"On the 4th of November, 1871, Capt. C. E. Montizambert, Quebec [illegible] Artillery, and [illegible] commissioned to recruit B Battery C.A. [illegible] first of the permanent [illegible] and at the same time to take [illegible] the military buildings [illegible] transferred to the militia [illegible] when the last of the [illegible] son sailed from Quebec [illegible] November. Among [illegible] solete materials we [illegible] bronze gun [illegible] the present R.C.R. quarters on [illegible] street. A [illegible] H. Tapp, a retired British officer, whom we had [illegible] knew, came to us, claiming that [illegible] gun was his personal property [illegible] it had been an heirloom in his family for about a century; that being determined to [illegible] himself permanently in Quebec he had caused the gun to be brought from [illegible] home in England, and that pe[illegible] the creation of a new home here had requested one of the military storekeepers to house it where [illegible] found it. He asked us to take charge of it until such time as he would claim it. He further volunteered the statement that the gun had formed part of the armament of an American sloop of war or privateer captured off the harbor of Boston in the early days of the Revolutionary war by his grand father, then an officer in the Royal navy. This officer had either received the gun as a reward or kept it as legitimate loot.

"During the summer of 1873, our new commandent, Lt.-Col. T. B. Strange, R.A., caused the gun to be mounted on an improvised carriage in the centre of the Citadel square, in the exact position it now occupies.

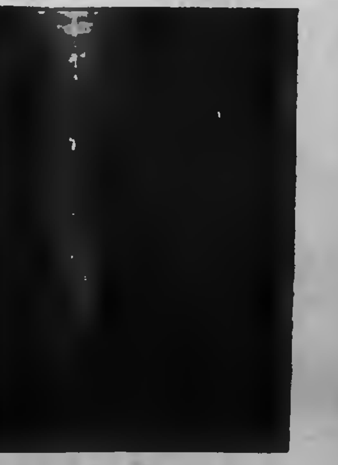
"In May, 1875, being on leave of absence, I visited the United States and among other cities Boston, and among its sights, the Bunker Hill monument. At the summit of this monument, reached by a long flight of stairs, is a quadrangular chamber. To my surprise I found affixed to the walls two bronze guns of the exact size and appearance of our Citadel gun. A third, but similar gun was in several fragments also affixed to the walls. On one of these was an inscription to the effect that: in the year 1723 four bronze guns were cast by order of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, that all were used during the war of Independence. Two of these were intact at the close of the war—the third exploded, (hence the fragments) and that the fourth had completely disappeared.

"There could be no doubt that Major Tapp's gun was the fourth gun referred to in this inscription. It exactly corresponds to its fellows in size and above all by the embossed oval escutcheon with the arms of Massachusetts—an Indian holding a bow above a lone star.

"I mentioned these facts to my brother officers after my return and I think gave the information to at least one of the Quebec papers of that year, 1875. Up to 1877 there was no inscription whatever on the gun itself. That year and the year following I was on service in England. After my return I noticed for the first time that the inscription, which still exists, had been deeply cut into the metal of the gun. I observed to Colonel Strange that there was no proof that this gun had ever been used and captured at the battle of Bunker's Hill, in fact the inscription was at variance with Major Tapp's first statement to Montizambert and I. He replied laughing, 'What does it matter? No one will be the wiser, but it will tickle the fancy of our American visitors.'

"Whether Major Tapp gave his consent to this inscription I never heard. In 1880—when B Battery C.A. was transferred to Kingston, we left the custody of the gun to the incoming garrison.

"Major William Hotaro Tapp never created for himself a home in Quebec, he resided with a private family at Mount Pleasant. Probably for that reason he never claimed the gun."



THE LATE SAMUEL NORDHEIMER
German Consul for Ontario and a pioneer piano manufacturer of Canada who died at his home in Toronto.

PLANTS OF ONTARIO

Valuable Collection Presented to Toronto University

A valuable collection of Ontario plants has been presented to the Department of Botany of the University of Toronto by Principal William Scott of the Normal School. There are about 5,000 sheets in all, thoroughly representative of the flora of certain parts of the Province, particularly of the east and central south. This collection embodies the work of many years, done by Principal Scott during the recreation hours of his busy life. As Principal Scott is known to be a careful collector and a discriminating botanist, this latest contribution adds much to the working store of Ontario plants in the herbarium of the University.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he can not accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith d[illegible] while the prisoner is sent for. A [illegible] comes from General Varney for Wi[illegible] to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to [illegible] out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

CHAPTER IX—The prisoner is thrust into the room alone with Thorne, who recognizes him as his elder brother, Henry Dumont. They put up a fake fight. Henry implores his brother to shoot him in the leg. Thorne refuses and Henry accidentally kills himself. Arrelsford rushes into the room with the guard. Thorne nonchalantly says: "Corporal, here is your prisoner, we had a fight and I shot him."

CHAPTER X—Caroline goes to the war department telegraph office to send a message.

CHAPTER XI—Arrelsford refuses to let Caroline's message go through. It is a telegram to Wilfred simply asking forgiveness, but Arrelsford suspects a double meaning. He and Edith secrete themselves to watch Thorne, whose arrival Arrelsford expects.

CHAPTER XII—Thorne takes charge of the telegraph office and after satisfying himself that he is alone attempts to send a message, but is interrupted by the arrival of a messenger from the secretary of war with a dispatch.

CHAPTER XIII—Arrelsford and Edith see Thorne alter the secretary's dispatch. Thorne is shot in the wrist by Arrelsford when he attempts to send it. Arrelsford calls the guard, and when they appear Thorne turns the tables by ordering the arrest of Arrelsford.

CHAPTER XIV—The removal of Arrelsford is stopped by the arrival of General Randolph. Thorne again begins sending the dispatch. Arrelsford protests declaring Thorne is sending a forged order to weaken the lines of defense. Randolph demands upon what authority Thorne has assumed command of the telegraph office. Miss Varney appears.

"Damn your orders!" he interrupted furiously. "You haven't got orders to shoot up everybody you see in this office, have you?"

This was too much for Arrelsford, and he made a desperate plunge forward to get at Thorne, who shook his wounded wrist in the secret service agent's face. The soldiers held him tightly, however, and Thorne continued hotly:

"Get his gun away, sergeant; he'll hurt somebody."

While the soldiers—who appeared to entertain no doubt and to have no hesitancy whatever about obeying Thorne's orders, the latter evidently the military man of the two and his voice and bearing, to say nothing of his uniform, telling heavily against a civilian like Arrelsford—were taking the revolver out of his hands, Thorne once more turned to the telegraph table. His blood was up and he would send the dispatch now before the whole assemblage, before the Confederate government or its army if necessary.

Arrelsford burst out in a last vain attempt to stop him:

"Listen to me, sergeant," he pleaded desperately, "he is going to send out a false telgram and—"

"That'll do," gruffly said the sergeant of the guard, shaking his fist in Arrelsford's face, "what is it all about, captain?"

"All about? I haven't the slightest idea. He says he comes from some office or other. I was sending off some important official dispatches here and he began by letting off his gun at me. Crazy lunatic, I think."

"It's a lie!" said Arrelsford furiously. "Let me speak—I will—prove—"

"Here!" said the sergeant of the guard, "that'll do now. What shall I do with him, captain?"

"I don't care a damn what you do with him. Get him out of here, that's all I want."

"Very well, sir. Are you much hurt?"

"Oh, no. He did up one hand, but I can get along with the other all right," said Thorne, sitting down at the table and seizing the key.

"Stop him!" cried Arrelsford, fully divining that Thorne intended to send the message. "He's sending a—wait!" A thought came to him. "Ask Miss Varney, she saw him—ask Miss Varney."

But the old sergeant of the guard paid no attention whatever to his frantic appeals.

"Here, fall in there!" he said. "We'll get him out, captain. Have you got him, men? Forward then!"

Struggling furiously the squad of soldiers forced Arrelsford to the door. Thorne paid absolutely no attention to them; he had forgotten their presence. Like his attention, his mind and heart were on they key again. But he was fated to meet with still another interruption.

"Halt there!" cried a sharp voice from the hall, just as the group reached the door.

"Halt! Left face!" cried the sergeant in turn, recognizing that here was a superior whom it were well to obey without question or hesitation.

"Here is General Randolph," said the voice outside, giving the name of one of the high officers of the Richmond garrison.

"Present arms!" cried the sergeant of the guard as General Randolph appeared in the doorway.

Following him were some officers of his staff and by his side was the imposing figure of Miss Caroline Mitford. The humiliation and indignation had vanished from her bearing which was one of unmitigated triumph. She threw a glance at Arrelsford which bode ill for that young man. The general entered the room and stopped before the secret service agent, who stood in front of the guard, although he had been released by the men.

"What's all this about?" he asked peremptorily.

Although he knew that something important was transpiring, and that the newcomer was a man of rank, Thorne never turned his head. At whatever cost, he realised he must get the telegram off, and from the look of things it appeared that his only chance was then and there. He did not care if the president of the Confederate States of America were there in person, his mind and soul were on the order. He was frantically calling the station he wanted, the one indicated by "Plan 3," and he had the doctored dispatch, to which he had pasted the secretary's signature, spread out on the table before him.

"What's all this about refusing to send out Miss Mitford's telegram?" began General Randolph peremptorily. "Some of your work, I understand, Mr. Arrelsford."

"General!" cried Arrelsford breathlessly. "They have arrested me. It is a conspiracy—" He turned toward Thorne. "Stop that man, for God's sake stop him before it's too late!"

At this juncture, Caroline Mitford turned from the room and joined old Martha in the hall, and disappeared. She had only come back with the general to punish Arrelsford, but she did not care to have her precious dispatch made the subject of discussion before so many people.

"Stop him!" exclaimed the general. "What do you mean?"

It was evident that the dispatch was not to go out then. Thorne had not succeeded in getting an answer to his signal. He left the key, rose and saluted.

"He means me, sir," he said. "He's got an idea some dispatch I'm sending out is a trick of the Yankees."

"It is a conspiracy!" cried Arrelsford. "He is an impostor—"

"Why, the man must have gone crazy, general," said Thorne coolly, holding his position by the table and listening with all his ears for the return signal.

"I came here on a case for—" expostulated Arrelsford.

"Wait!" said General Randolph. "I will soon get at the bottom of this. What was he doing when you came in, sergeant?" he asked of the non-commissioned officer in charge of the guard.

"He was firing on the captain, sir," answered the sergeant saluting.

"He was sending out a false order to weaken our lines at Cemetery Hill, and I—ah—Miss Varney, she was here. She saw it all," explained Arrelsford.

"Miss Varney!" exclaimed the general.

"Yes, sir."

"The general's daughter?"

"Yes, sir."

"And what was she doing here?"

"She came to see for herself whether this man was guilty or not; whether he was a spy or a traitor."

"Is this some personal matter of yours, Mr. Arrelsford?" asked the general suspiciously.

"He was a visitor at her house and I wanted her to know."

"Where is she now? Where is Miss Varney?" asked Randolph impatiently.

"She must be out there on the balcony," answered Arrelsford. "I beg you to send for her, sir."

"Sergeant," said General Randolph, "step out on the balcony. Present my compliments to Miss Varney, and ask her to come in at once."

In a moment the sergeant returned.

"There is no one there, sir," he replied saluting.

At that instant Thorne got the long desired signal. Without a moment's hesitation, he turned to the key. He picked up the dispatch with his wounded left hand and with the other began to manipulate the sounder.

"She must be there," said Arrelsford, "or else she's stepped into the next room, the commissary general's office, the window was open, tell him to—ah!" as the sound of the clicking caught his ear, "Stop him. He is sending it now!"

Mr. Arrelsford's distress was so overwhelming and so genuine that something of the man's suspicion was communicated to the general.

"One moment, captain," he said.

Captain Thorne, of course, had no option but to release the key. He stopped sending and dropped the dispatch, saluting.

"Now, Mr. Arrelsford," said the general, "what have you to do with the military telegraph department?"

"This is a secret service case; they assigned it to me, sir."

"What is a secret service case?"

"The whole plot to send the order. It's the Yankee secret service. He is a member of it and his brother brought in the signal tonight."

"I beg your pardon, sir," said Thorne, "this dispatch ought to go out at once, sir. It came from the secretary of war and it is very urgent."

"Go ahead with it," said General Randolph.

Thorne needed no further permission than that, dropped to his seat, and once more seized the fatal key.

"No, no!" cried Arrelsford. "Don't let him—I tell you it's a—"

"Silence, sir," thundered Randolph.

"Do you know what he is telling them?" persisted Arrelsford.

"No, do you?"

"Yes," returned the secret service agent.

"Wait a moment, Captain Thorne," said the general, impressed in spite of himself by this man's earnestness, which made him disregard all orders, commands and everything else. "Where is the dispatch?"

Captain Thorne picked up the paper and handed it to the general, and then stepped back. He had played his last card. He played it desperately, boldly and well.

"Get His Gun Away, He'll Hurt Somebody."

"Well?" asked the general, looking from the dispatch to the accuser, "what has he been telling them?"

"He began to give an order to withdraw Marston's division from its present position," said Arrelsford, making a brilliant and successful guess at the probable point of attack in "Plan 3."

"That is perfectly correct," said General Randolph, looking at the paper.

"Yes, by that dispatch, but that dispatch is a forgery. It is an order to withdraw a whole division from a vital point. A false order, he wrote it himself. This is the turning point of the whole plot."

"But why should he write it himself? If he wanted to send a false order, he could send it without putting it down on paper, couldn't he?"

"Yes," admitted Arrelsford, but he went on with great acuteness, "if any of the operators came back they would catch him doing it. With that order and the secretary's signature he could go right on. He could even order one of them to send it."

"And pray how did he get the secretary's signature to a forged telegram?" asked General Randolph.

"He tore it off a genuine dispatch. Why, general, look at that dispatch in your hand yourself. The secretary's signature is pasted on, I saw him do it."

"They often come that way, sir," said Thorne nonchalantly.

"He is a liar!" cried Arrelsford. "They never do!"

Thorne stepped forward impulsively, his face flushed at the word "liar," but he controlled himself.

"General," he said, "if you have any doubt about that dispatch, send it back to the war department and have it verified."

It was a splendid, magnificent bluff. So overwhelming in its assurance that even Arrelsford himself was petrified with astonishment. He was morally certain that Thorne was a federal secret service agent and that the dispatch was a forgery, yet it would take but a few minutes to send it over to the secretary's office and convict him out of his own mouth. What could the man mean!

"That's a good idea," said General Randolph. He hesitated a moment and then turned to the guard. "Sergeant," he said, "take this dispatch over to the secretary's office and—"

At that moment, the key which had been silent began a lively clicking. General Randolph turned toward it, and Thorne made a quick step in the same direction.

"What's that?" asked the general.

Thorne stood by the desk listening while the key clicked out the message.

"Adjutant General Cheeney," he spelt out slowly.

"Oh, from the front, then?" said Randolph.

"Yes, sir," answered Thorne.

"What is he saying?"

Thorne stepped to the table and bent over the clicking key. "His compliments, sir," he read off slowly. "He asks"—waiting for a few minutes—"for the rest,"—still another pause—"of that dispatch—he says it's of vital importance, sir, and—"

The communication which Thorne had made to General Randolph was in itself of vital importance. The general was too good a soldier not to know the danger of delay in the carrying out of military maneuver which was probably part of some general plan of attack or defense of which he was not privy. He made up his mind instantly. He took the dispatch from the hand of the sergeant and turned it over to Thorne again.

"Let him have it," he said decisively.

The captain with his heart pounding like mad sat down at the table and seized the key. Was he going to complete the dispatch? Was the plan to be carried out. Had he triumphed in the bold and desperately played game by his splendid courage, resourcefulness, and assurance? His eyes shone, the color came back into his pale cheeks as his hands trembled on the key.

"General!" cried Arrelsford, "I, you——"

"That's enough, sir. We will have you examined at headquarters."

At that instant Lieutenant Foray came rapidly into the room.

"Thank God!" cried Arreleford, as he caught sight of him. "There's a witness, he was sent away on a forged order, ask him?"

Another interruption, thought Thorne, desperately fingering the keys. If they would only give him a minute more he could complete the order, but he was not to have that minute apparently.

"Wait, captain," said General Randolph quickly, and again the key was silent. "Now, sir," he said to Lieutenant Foray, "where did you come from?"

The lieutenant did not all comprehend what was toward, but his answer to that question was plain.

"There was some mistake, sir," he answered, saluting.

"Ah!" cried Arrelsford, a note of triumph in his voice.

"Who made it?" asked the general.

"I got an order to go to the president's house," returned Foray, "and when I got there the president—"

Thorne made one last attempt to complete his message.

"BUY CANADIAN-MADE GOODS"

The above maxim is one that should seriously be considered by each and every Canadian citizen, for it is one of great moment and importance to the condition and welfare any country seeks to attain. The result of purchasing abroad goods and materials which can be supplied at home is strikingly displayed by government statistics, which form sufficient evidence to prove that Canada is not in the position it should command through its trade and commerce. To purchase beyond the country's means will in time cause results of a noticeable character and this is being done at present at a rate, unsatisfactory to Canadian industry. Money expended in this way must cause a reaction sooner or later, and the credit of the country must naturally be impaired as in the case of any individual who spends beyond his means. Expenditure must be concentrated and made in the country in which it is earned, before the effect of original earnings will accumulate. In purchasing goods abroad, Canadian raw material and labor must naturally become less desirable. Attached to such a condition of affairs are unsatisfactory labor conditions, poorer grades of material and other accumulated effects. It is clearly the duty of patriotic citizens of Canada to build up a country where money can be secured at any time it is desired but with expenditures being made outside, no security can be given and conditions must decline.—The Wainwright Star.

ALASKA'S BIG BEARS

In a Test of Strength They Would Outclass Jungle Beasts

Very few persons really know that largest flesh-eating animals in the world are found in North America. People genrally believe that the African lion is the king of beasts, but he is not nearly as large or as powerful an animal as the large brown bear of sub-arctic America. The bears are not as ferocious or combative as the lions, nor are they nearly as vicious as they are given credit for being, but the largest of them are much larger and more powerful than any of the lions. It is safe to say that the largest of the brown bears of the North would weigh three times as much as the largest specimen of lion, and is beyond all question greatly superior in strength. If brought together in combat, the bear would at first appear very clumsy. It would not be capable of the quick rush or the catlike spring of the lion. It would not attack, but would remain entirely on the defensive, meeting its adversary with blows of such rapidity and terific force as at once to illustrate its superiority not only in strength but in action. There is not an animal in the world that can act more quickly or effectively than the bear. The large brown bears of the Alaska peninsula, South of Bering Sea, are among the largest bears of the world, and there is no part of the world outside of North America in which such large flesh-eating animals are found. The bears are carnivorous, yet there are none of them that depend upon flesh for food, and with most of them flesh comprises but a very small percentage of their food.

WOMEN IN FACTORIES

How Their Employment in Lancashire Affects the Birth Rate

Dr. Hugh R. Jones, an eminent English physician who investigated in the factory districts of Lancashire the influence that the industrial employment of married women has upon the birth rate and the sex ratio at birth. Some elaborate tables of statistics which on analyzing he sums up as follows:

1. That the employment of married women in industrial occupations tends to diminish the birth rate.
2. That such employment tends to the birth of a large proportion of girl infants.
3. That low birth rates tend to the birth of a larger proportion of girl infants.
4. That the rate of infantile mortality is higher as the proportion of employed married women rises.

BEER IN CHINA

The attempt of a corporation organized in Hongkong with foreign capital, largely from Honolulu, to establish a brewing business on the South Asiatic coast was unsuccessful. The concern erected a modern brewery on a portion of the mainland opposite HongKong in 1908, but lost money from the beginning and went into voluntary liquidation.

For a time there was some reason to expect the successful introduction of beer among the Chinese of Hongkong. Sales of the company's output increased considerably, and growing popularity gave some practical ground for anticipating a change in Chinese tastes. The fact finally became plain, however, that for the time being the Chinese do not take to beer.

Digestion seemed more or less arrested and I grew thin, yellow, nervous. The stomach became distended and impeded apparently the action of the heart, for often at night it would do great stunts. At times I would vomit a mucous mass, and at these times my head ached most terribly. A friend who had been cured of a similar condition, advised me to take Dr. Hamilton's Pills regularly, which I did. The result in my case was simply marvelous. He frantically called two ladies, who had accompanied him on the Esturian. Now, it may be said by scoffers that ladies think first of their personal appearance. However, one of the typo's lady friends, releasing a net from her hair, put it round a bent willow and landed the fish, which proved to be a four pound bass.

When they returned home it was found that someone had entered the house through a side window, and Mr. Jobe missed a revolver and a purse containing a small sum of money in silver. MURDER THEIR OCCUPATION

New York, June 24. — Blackmail, murders, opium-smuggling and smuggling of Coolies across the border were revealed in letters and documents taken yesterday upon the arrest of Wong Do King, head of the Bing Kung Tong, according to information given out today by federal immigration officials. Death, the immigration men say, was the penalty of all who opposed or attempted to betray the schemes of the High Binders. The deportation of Wong will be sought at once and other Chinese, powerful in many American cities, will be prosecuted.

Wong, for 20 years, has been head of the Bing Kungs, the most warlike and powerful of the Chinese tongs. Widespread levying of blackmail, said to be the principal activity of the Bing Kungs, was made effective by a score of gunmen on salaries with bonuses for killing "big men." The Kung men also protected gambling dens and owners of Chinese and American slave girls, the letters show. Many letters bear upon the recent tong war, which extended the length of the Pacific coast, some of them giving specific instructions for the killing of various men. One of the letters was a catechism for smuggled Chinese, preparing them for questions by immigration inspectors if apprehended.

MINISTER IS BUSY WORKING ON THE PARCELS POST

No Time is Being Lost by Hon. L. P. Pelletier to Put Plan into Operation. Equitable Rates Being Arranged

(Special to The Times.)

Ottawa, June 26.—The Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General is losing no time in developing by means of the bill which was passed at the recent session of parliament, his ideas on the parcels post system. The result will be that Canada will have but to wait a very short time to have the benefits of the system. The Postmaster-General is busily engaged in securing data and other information to enable him to perfect as soon as possible the details of the scheme. The rates question is one that naturally demands most attention and the Minister wishes to arrange for rates that will be just and equitable to all concerned.

An official of the United States Government, who has had considerable experience in perfecting the details of the Bourne bill there, will be brought to Ottawa to give the Post Office Department the benefits of the knowledge gained in the eight months' successful operation of the system across the border.

When the House meets in the fall, Mr. Pelletier will be ready to proceed in putting the system in force, although it is not necessary to await the meeting of Parliament, as the bill provides that the scheme can be put in operation by Proclamation.

It will be in force not later than the beginning of the New Year, the same period of time that elapsed before the Bourne measure in the United States went into force.

The people will then get the benefit of useful legislation and money will be saved.

BRITAIN IS ANXIOUS TO KEEP ON GOOD TERMS WITH GERMANS

While Crowds Cheer Poincare, Care is Being Taken Not to Disturb Peaceful Anglo-German Relations--John Burns to Retire--Money Crisis Past

London, June 26.— London this week is charged with an optimism which has been absent for some weeks. While the city, bedecked with flags and packed with enormous crowds, is shouting itself hoarse in honor of the French President, responsible politicians and financiers declare their belief that the darkest clouds which threatened us have passed. Although the situation in Eastern Europe is till uncertain, there is now a general expectation that peace will be maintained.

Financial Crisis Past.

Financially it is believed that the worst of the monetary crisis has been passed. Yesterday the London Stock Exchange showed every sign of healthy recovery. The coming settlement, which two days ago was anticipated with dread, is to-day contemplated with little, if any, alarm. London financiers will go slow for weeks to come, but the feared general financial debacle has been escaped.

WAR HAS BROKEN OUT IN THE TROUBLED BALKINS

Belgrade, Servia, June 25.— Later reports from the scene of the fighting say that the Fervian artillery had gone into action and a fierce battle was in progress, in which the both sides had suffered considerable losses.

The Bulgarians attack on the Servians has created a dangerous state of excitement here. The newspapers publish special editions declaring in large type "War Has Begun." The streets are filled with excited crowds.

GIRL MERCURY VICTIM FIGHTS HARD TO LIVE

Boston, June 25.—Cheering the nurses and physicians at the Malden hospital in their efforts to save her life, 19-year-old Susan McLaughlin, 35 Bryant street, Malden, is making a heroic battle for her life, after a two weeks' battle for life, following the accidental swallowing of the same subtle poison.

Miss McLaughlin talks cheerily with those of her family who visit her. To them she tells of repenting swallowing the tablets, and of a desire to aid in every way the doctors and nurses who are battling night and day to bring her back to health.

At the present, the treatment consists of the frequent use of the stomach pump for cleansing the stomach, which is then filled with the whites of eggs, both to absorb the poison in the system and to form a coating over the irritated membrane of the stomach. The hospital authorities are in readiness, however, should there be any turn for the worse, to resort to steaming the patient between hot blankets to assist in releasing the poison.

So far as can be determined there is no change in the condition of Miss McLaughlin from Thursday, the day following her arrival at the hospital. Every symptom is being closely watched, however, and the fact that the patient has retained her strength and is co-operating in ever way gives the physicians hope of recovery. But the physicians admit that they cannot tell for a day or two yet whether or not she will recover.

The only nourishment which is given the patient is milk in small quantities.

Not until last evening were relatives willing to discuss the young woman's act. Her mother, Mrs. Mary Agnes McLaughlin, who has eight children, of which number Miss Susie and her two brothers, Arnold and Edward, live at home at 35 Bryant street, told of finding her daughter, of the attempt at suicide, and of the battle to save the young girl's life.

"Susie has been working for the past year at a Western avenue restaurant in Lynn," said Mrs. McLaughlin. "Four weeks ago she gave up her place of her own accord and came back here to live with me. She has been living with another sister in Lynn. She wanted to get work here.

"When she did not go to work her brother started to tease her about it. At first I thought this might have caused her to attempt suicide. She told her sister, Mrs. Eugene Ryan of 46 Barrett lane, however, that she had a job at a dye house here, in Malden, and that she intended to start to work Thursday. That was the morning after she took the tablets.

"While in Lynn, her sister had some bichloride of mercury tablets. Susie must have obtained the tablets there.

GIRL, 7, EATS COLORED WAX CRAYONS ; POISON

Atlanta, Ga., June 25.—With her body paralyzed and in an unconscious condition, little seven-year-old Mary Tribble has been confined to her east Atlanta home for two weeks Physicians attending the little school girl attribute her probable fatal illness to eating colored crayons.

It is stated that a few days before the local schools closed for summer vacation the child ate several small sticks of brightly colored wax crayons. When she returned to the home of her father, a local policeman, she became ill and within a few hours lapsed into unconsciousness. All efforts of physicians to arouse her from the comatose condition have proven futile.

The doctors believe the coloring matter in the crayons contained some kind of poison which has caused paralysis. They express the belief that the child will not recover.

LOCAL PEOPLES' RELATIVES REFERRED TO

Montreal Star: "A well known writer in discussing a few days ago the important question of who is to be ruler of the new independent Kingdom of Albania, remarked that there was a great chance of the election of one of the Servian Princes to the Throne of Albania. Prince Mirko and Peter, of Montenegro are certainly highly gifted young men, rather popular among the Mallissori and Mizditti of Northern Albania. A famous Servian historian thought that the Karageorgevitch dynasty hailed from Albania, and was connected with the clan of Clementi. Prince George, the elder son of King Peter, by his temperament, his virtues and his failing by his bravery and high sense of honor, is really a typical Albanian."

In reference to the above, it might be noted that blood relatives of the Clementi clan referred to above, live in this City.

FALLS MAN SAVES HIS LIFE BY CLEVER RUSE

Niagara Falls, June 26. — John Pride, a colored man, residing at 26 Cherry street, is locked up at police headquarters on a charge of assault.

Late last night, according to the police, Pride went into the Sharkey pool room in Main street near Thomas street. He wanted to enter a game that was in progress, but Robert Crutcher, also colored, protested. The men had an argument and came two men had an argument and came to blows, Crutcher getting the better of it. Pride left the pool room and going to his home in Cherry street, secured a 32-calibre revolver and laid in wait for Crutcher, is was said, who lives in the same street at No. 19.

Crutcher came along at 1 o'clock and Pride, Crutcher says, fired two shots at him at almost point blank range, Crutcher was not hit, but he had the good sense to fall to the ground.

Officers Matthew McKnight and Terrence O'Reilly, hearing the shots, hurried to the scene. They met Crutcher who told them of the circumstances. They went to Pride's house and, breaking in the front door, found Pride, they say, under the dining room table with his revolver still in his hand. Officer McKnight pulled him out. The man raised his gun, but the officer sent it flying across the room with a well-directed blow of his night stick.

"Is Crutcher dead ?" was Pride's first word, according to the officers.

"Sure he is," replied one of the officers. Pride had to be assisted to headquarters. There he saw Crutcher in the flesh and was at once restored to his normal mind.

"I only wanted to scare him," he is reported to have said.

Chicago, June 25.—Because Miss Ruth Mehl was hit in the face with a punching bag, Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist, must pay her $2,500, a jury decided in the Circuit Court to-day.

The young woman was struck by the bag which Johnson knocked from its fastenings in an exhibition at a theatre last year. She sued for $2,500.

A GREAT GATHERING

Canada and the World's Sunday School Convention.

About two hundred men and women chiefly those specially interested in Sunday School work, are on their way on almost twenty different steamships, to be in attendance at the World's Seventh Sunday School Convention, to be held in Zurich, Switzerland, July 8-15. Of this number, 110 are from the Province of Ontario, 10 from Alberta, 12 from Quebec, 16 from Nova Scotia, 12 from New Brunswick, 16 from British Columbia, and 16 from Saskatchewan. Almost every country on the globe, where any missionary work has ever been begun will be represented in this World's Convention. At the Sixth Convention in Washington three years ago, Ontario had some 77 representatives and never more than 50 at any previous gathering. This shows an increasing interest. Among the Canadian delegates who appear on the programme are Justice J. J. Maclaren, of the Supreme Court, Rev. J. C. Robertson, B. D., General Secretary for Sabbath Schools, General Assembly Presbyterian Church, and Rev. E. W. Halpenny, B.D., General Secretary Ontario Sunday School Association.

FORCED TO WALL GIRL PRISONED IN BUILDING

Madrid, June 25.—The police of Barcelona are investigating the story of Esteban Gutierrez, a stone mason, who declares that he was forced to wall up a young girl in a building in the city.

Gutierrez says that two well-dressed men called at his home with a motor car, and asked him to accompany them a short distance into the country to carry out some urgent repairs.

When they were outside the city the men seized Gutierrez, bound him, and blindfolded his eyes. A few minutes later the car stopped in front of a lonely house.

The mason says he was led inside, and ordered to wall up a narrow aperture. He heard some one sobbing, and, tearing the bandage from his eyes, he saw a young girl bound with ropes and wedged in the aperture.

His captors ordered him to build a wall so as to enclose the unfortunate girl, and when Gutierrez refused they threatened him with revolvers. He says that he was forced to comply with their commands, after which the car conveyed him to a wood several miles away.

Before leaving him in the wood the men gave Gutierrez $20 in silver, and warned him not to speak of the incident. He was found by a woodman, and he went at once to the police.

ROMAN CARDINALS ASK MERRY DEL VALS CONGE

Leader of Ultra-Conservative Princes of Catholic Church is Unpopular

New York, June 26.—A cable to The Tribune from Rome says: For some time past reports have been current that several powerful members of the College of Cardinals have determined to demand from the Pope the removal of Cardinals Merry del Val and De Lai from their present places of practically omnipotent power.

These reports emanating from circles known to be hostile to the Vatican, were set down as mere anticlerical scandals, and nobody paid much attention to them. Now, it seems that they are far from fully covering the gravity of the break between the liberal and ultra-conservative princes of the Church.

Cardinal Merry del Val is the accepted leader of the latter party. Cardinal Rampolla is the leader of the liberals. Through the visit yesterday of Sardinal Rampolla to the Pope the facts in the case are partly available and these come from semi-official sources.

Cardinal Rampolla and those who agree with him, hold that the manner in which Cardinals Del Val and DeLai are prosecuting their campaign against modernism, is likel to embroil the Vatican in further disputes such as those between the Church and France, Portugal and Spain.

CHILD SLEPT ON AS CAR TURNED TURTLE

Rochester, N.Y., June 25.—The infant child of Mrs. Charlotte Schaubert, of 8 Hudson avenue, miraculously escaped death here last evening, when a big automobile turned turtle in the Scottsville road. The mother was badly injured, but the baby which was sleeping in her arms, has not even a scratch to tell of the experience. When the mother was removed to the Homeopathic Hospital the child was still sleeping peacefully.

He was awarded first prize in the class for qualified hunters, with Sir Cames, while he was third in the middle-weight with Sir Edward, his Melrose in the same event being highly commended by the judges.

ELEVEN DIE IN BUFFALO FIRE--DEBRIS SEARCHED

Bodies Visible in Ruins Were Object of Firemen During The Morning

Buffalo, June 25.—Three bodies were dug out of the smouldering ruins of the Huested Milling Company elevator this morning, two more are visible in the debris, two of the victims succumbed to the injuries, bringing the total of the dead list from the explosion and fire up to eleven. The bodies recovered today were so badly charred that identification was impossible.

Two Bodies Can Be Seen.

Two bodies could be seen stretched out across the floor of one of the balconies. No men were at work in the cupola, and it was believed these whose bodies were in sight fled to the tower, following the explosion and there the flames overwhelmed them.

Careful checking up of the employees' time cards has accounted either in dead, injured in hospitals or very slightly injured and at home, of all but eight men. These men are believed to have been caught in the upper portions of the elevator and cut off from escape.

BYLAW TO PROHIBIT STORES IN WEST END TO BE PREPARED

Will Be Debated and Voted on in City Council To-Night--MR. R. C. Braund Says He is Going to Build His Store on Charlotte Street West or Know the Reason Why

The city's Board of Works met in business session last night, Chairman Ald. Buller presiding. There were also present, Mayor W. H. Bradburn, Aldermen Anderson, McIntyre, Johnston, Duffus, and City Engineer R. H. Parsons. Mr. R. C. Braund addressed the Board in regard to the oppisition by West End citizens to his building a store on the corner of St. Joseph and Charlotte streets. Mr. Fraund explained that he had bought the property a year ago for the express purpose of building a store and paif $500 more than the property is worth for residential purposes. There is no other suitable place for commercial purposes in the neighborhood. If the city exempts the property in question for a store a section of property comprising from 40 to 50 blocks will be exempted. He has purchased and paid for this brick and lumber, a portion of the latter being laid down on the property yesterday. For two weeks past he has had the carpenters hired. Mr. Braund thought the residents petitioning against his proposition not against a harm but against a dislike.

His Worship thought it a credit to the section of the city alluded to by Mr. Braund not to have a store in their midst. The Mayor yesterday morning issued instructions that a building permit be not issued to Mr. Braund until the issue at stake was enquired into by the Board of Works and acted on by Council.

Mr. Braund said he was going to build a store there or know the reason why and quit.

Aldermen Johnston and Anderson thought the main objection lie in the proposition to build the store out to the street line, and thus obstructing the view, and depreciating values of adjacent properties.

His Worship offered that the adjacent residents (mostly mechanics) had purchased their homes on the understanding that no stores were to be erected in the locality, and he would strongly oppose their view being shut out by a store, as proposed by Mr. Braund, and consequently the value of their properties depreciated.

The Mayor moved, seconded by Ald. Gordon, that this Board recommend to council to-night that they pass a by-law to-night prohibiting the erection of buildings for commercial purposes within the following area: From Weller St. (both sides), south to King street (both sides), and from the west side of Park street to the Monaghan road.--Carried.

Neither Aldermen Johnston or Anderson object to stores within the foregoing area so long as they are built on a line with the other buildings.

The dwelling house at the corner of Charlotte and St. Joseph streets purchased by Mr. Braund stands some 33 feet back from the street line, and it was his intention to add a store frontage to the house on a line with the street. He would, however, be willing, he said, to leave six feet between the street line and the proposed store front.

Two New Bridges.

Debentures will be issued for the erection of two new bridges as follows:

One over the street on McDonnel street, between Monaghan Road and Park street, at a cost of $2,935. One over the creek on Park street, between McDonnel and Murray street, at a cost of $3,297.

Two per cent. of these amounts, it is estimated, can be charged against the street Railway Co., amounting to $50.48 in the former case, and $66.94 in the latter case.

The Engineer submitted plans of these bridges last night, and a by-law authorizing their construction will be prepared.

Romaine St. Sewer Again

Rev. Dr. O'Brien wrote that ever since spring, at every rainfall the Romaine street sewer backs up into the lavatories of Sacred Heart Church.

Attention will be directed toward abating this nuisance.

Stand Pipes.

No action will be taken this year on petitions to remove standpipes.

To Remove Building From Street.

Ald. Gordon moved, seconded by the Mayor, that the summer house be removed from off Rubidge street, between London and McDonnel streets and that the parties owning the property in question acknowledge that the kitchen is abutting on the street by paying the city a nominal rental, the lease to be terminated at any time.

This refers to the old Bradburn homestead, now used by the Roman Catholic church as an orphanage. The kitchen in question was built 25 years ago, and the summer house erected recently in ignorance that it was located on the street. The Sisters, as soon as notified that the summer house was on the street, volunteered to remove it.

SAD TRAGEDY MARS AN ORPHANS TRIP--ONE DEAD

Three-Year-Old Boy Playing on the street Met Almost Instant Death

Toronto, Cune 25.—A sad tragedy marred the outing given to the orphans by the members of the Ontario Motor League this morning, when one of the string of daily decked cars, bearing their loads of shouting, happy children to Scarboro Park crushed the life out of the little 3-year-old son of Samuel Babcock, 94 Doel avenue, shortly before noon. He struck his head against the front of the machine.

On the sidewalk watching the procession pass and her little one playing in the street, was the mother of the child, who saw him killed before her eyes, without being able to lift a finger to save him. The horrible suddenness of the accident proved to be too great a strain upon her and she relapsed into hysterics and had to be carried into her house.

Killed Instantly

The child had been standing with a number of others watching the procession pass down Leslie street, and he suddenly darted across the street and endeavored to pass between a car driven by Mr. McGillivray Knowles, the artist, and the one ahead of it. Before Mr. Knowles could stop his auto or turn it so as to avoid an accident, the child was struck and thrown, receiving injuries that resulted in almost instant death.

PETES WON FAST GAME FROM BERLIN TEAM, 5-1

In a fast and well played game yesterday, the Petes defeated Berlin at Riverside Park, before a large gathering of fans. The main stand was well filled with the fair sex and their appearance no doubt encouraged the boys and helped them to victory.

Two new men were on the job yesterday and they pulled off some clever playing. Thompson the new second baseman got everything that came his way, and put up a brilliant game, while Schrage on third, was also full of life. The boys did some good hitting yesterday and in all the game was well worth seeing. Sterling in the box for the Petes, put up a good fast ball and kept the visitors well in hand throughout the whole game.

The final score stood 5—1.

The Typos B.B.C. will hold their regular practice to-night at Riverside Park, immediately after Sunday League game. All those interested are requested to be on hand for a workout.

GIBSON CASE UP TO CABINET TO-MORROW

Ottawa, June 25.—The Gibson murder case probably will now be laid before the Cabinet to-morrow. Hon. C. J. Doherty and P. M. Cole, examiner of criminal cases for the Department of Justice, have been spending a great deal of time considering the case during the past week.

It is understood that the report of the examiner of capital cases is against any reconsideration or retrial of the case. There have only been two precedents for a re-trial, and the Department hesitates to grant one except the evidence is overwhelming. The Minister of Justice refuses to give any hint as to what action he favors. In addition to the Gibson case there are six more men sentenced for death whose cases will have to be reviewed very shortly by Mr. Doherty.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 10c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., [illegible] George St., directly opposite [illegible] store.

HIGHWAYS OF THE SEA

Regular Lanes of Traffic Followed by Ocean Vessels—Determined by Ice Drift and Currents

Nowadays, as, for that matter, from time out of mind, ships on the Atlantic do not stray off certain well defined lanes unless driven to do so by unprecedentedly severe weather. But nowadays this holds true even more than formerly. In former times, the prevailing winds at different seasons, the set of various ocean currents, and peculiar natural phenomena, played considerable parts in the determination of the great trade routes, just as the location of wells and oases determines caravan routes across the African deserts. Ships naturally steered on courses on which they were most helped by the winds blowing at the different season of the year, as well as by currents like the Gulf Stream.

The lanes used by the great transAtlantic liners, however, are governed entirely by the icedrift from the north. This ice-drift is a regular phenomenon, and clogs the seas as far south as the latitude of Cape Hatteras to a point about 40 degrees west longitude, not very far from the Azores. That is to say, about half the seas between the American and European continents are subject to the peril of the iceberg. Years ago shippers discovered this, and when transAtlantic travel began to assume the proportions of an industry, the custom gradually grew up of setting regular routes across the Atlantic, depending upon the presence of ice.

The northern or short line is followed late in the year, after all the Greenland floes and bergs have drifted down and disintegrated in the warmer southern waters the southern or short course is that followed the greater portion of the year, when the presence of ice is a constant menace to navigation. There is not a great deal of latitudinal difference between the two, and there is no attempt to get wholly below the limit of the ice drift, for that would involve an impossible and really futile detour; but the southern course was always regarded as absolutely safe, until the disaster to the Titanic.

One of the most interesting facts about the ocean lanes is their semi-official character to-day. Although they were never, in the first place adopted by formal law or agreement, they are now in a sense subject to the regulation of the companies that use them, and skippers receive regular orders from their owners as to which they shall follow.

Other ocean lanes are not so complicated as the transAtlantic path to northern Europe. They depend simply upon getting from one point to another in as near a straight line as possible, with the ordinary precautions against reefs and shoals or intervening land masses.

To find the beginnings of sea lanes of travel, you must go far back to the beginnings of things, to the days when men first ventured on the sea and pushed timorously from cape to cape, anchoring by night and rarely sailing out of sight of land. The Phoenician mariners, who sent their galleys through the Pillars of Hercules and up to Ireland for cargoes of tin, were among the first to map out recognized routes for sea commerce, and one cannot resist a deep respect for their daring in thus exploring a way that their ancestors must have looked upon with wholly superstitious dread.

And it is strangely true that nowadays, when the ocean lanes are so much greater in number, so incomparably more far-flung in character, the same general conditions hold good on the grander scale that has been assumed. The waters of the world—or that portion of it which is to any extent inhabited—are criss-crossed in every direction by innumerable paths followed by vessels, both sail and steam; but it is still possible to find wide areas in which a sail or steamship's smoke are not sighted for months on end. What vessel blown into the middle of the vast tract in the South Atlantic, roughly delimited by the routes followed by vessels from North American ports to Gibraltar and by the course of ships from the South American ports bound for Europe, would have any logical hope of assistance?

True, stray ships from Vera Cruz, Mazatlan, and the Gulf ports of Mexico and Central America occasionally cross this desert waste of waters on voyages to Cadiz, Barcelona, or other Iberian parts; but they are few and far between, and unless compelled to do so by nature, they seldom or never deviate from a hairline course from coast to coast. One might be dismasted or disabled in this desert of waters, without any help within hundreds of miles of one for more than a year perhaps.

In the middle of it lies the Sargasso Sea, that vague, mysterious, wilderness of clinging seaweed, a haven of sinister romance, the graveyard of a myriad of goodly ships.

All mariners in distress dread this wide patch of lonely sea. They know the fate that would inevitably overcome the disabled craft, limited in supplies, its boats smashed or washed away, that drifted in the trough of the waves, which active keels do not furrow. They know that they would stand no more chance of rescue than if they were caught in the Antarctic ice.

Bishop Rowe and Alaska

Archdeacon Stuck, of Alaska, after his annual cruise in the Pelican, wrote from Tanana to the "Spirit of Missions" that Bishop Rowe has worked a veritable miracle at that mission. The natives have been worked upon and moved to band themselves together against the introduction of liquor among them; they had two of their own number arrested andd fined for drukenness and disorder, and gave public notice in the local paper that they would testify in court against any man who attempted to sell them liquor. Under the Bishop's leadership they started a large communal garden and elected a village council, and a new chief.

THE FRUIT OF EDEN

Eastern Belief That Serpent Hid Itself in Bunch of Bananas

There exists a legend relative to the Christian inhabitants of the East, that they believed the banana to be the tree of the source of good or evil, in a bunch of whose fruit the serpent that tempted Eve hid itself, and they add that when Adam and Eve became ashamed of their nakedness they covered themselves with the leaves of this plant. Beyond all doubt this legend had some influence upon the minds of those early botanical classifiers who designated two species of the plant by the names of Fruit of Paradise, Fruit of Knowledge.

The origin of the banana is given as India, at the foot of the Himalayas, where it has been cultivated since remotest antiquity. Its origin in the new world is as doubtful as the origin of the American Indian. Natural to Asia and Africa, where more than twenty distinct species of the genus are known, it is said, to have been brought first to America from Spain, early in the sixteenth century, and planted in the island of Santo Domingo, whence its spread was rapid throughout the surrounding islands and the mainland. This has never been authentically established, however, and some authorities include the banana among the articles that formed the base of the food suply of the Incas and the Aztecs before the arrival of the Spaniards.

RAILWAY DEVELOPMENT

No one should object to the assistance given to the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific who is not prepared to see a suspension of the work in these great undertakings. The money market is so stringent that it is utterly impossible to float large loans on foreign markets. The Dominion cannot afford to have work cease on these transcontinental lines, and the Government has assured itself that this is what is very likely to happen if such aid is not granted. Such a result would bring with it a depression that would have very grave effects upon every man and every business in the country. There will, of course, be more or less criticism of the Government's action, but there would be much more criticism of the Government's inaction if the result outlined above came to pass.

Any Headache Cured, Tired Systems Re-Toned

When You're Dull, Tired, Restless Day and Night Something is Wrong With the Stomach.

A Prominent Publishing Man Says The Quickest Cure is Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Headaches never come to those who use Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and this fact is vouched for by the Assistant Manager of the Poultry Success Magazine, of Springfield, O., Mr. J. H. Callander, who writes: "No better medicine than Dr. Hamilton's Pills. We use them regularly and know of marvelous cures that resisted everything else. They cleanse the whole system, act as a tonic to the blood, enliven digestion, help the stomach, and make you feel strong and well. For headache, indigestion and stomach disorders I am confident that the one prescription is Dr. Hamilton's Pills."

Being composed of natural vegetable remedies, Dr. Hamilton's Pills possess great power, yet they are harmless. They aid all organs connected with the stomach, liver, and bowels. In consequence, food is properly digested, the blood is pure and nourishing, the body is kept strong and resists disease, all druggists and storekeepers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, 5 for $1.00, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

THE GERMAN WAR TAX

It appears that Germany is already feeling the results of the new military tax. Building operations in the larger cities have been affected, the price of stocks has been depressed, and capitalists are getting as much of their money out of the country as possible. The military tax which has brought about these conditions is practically a war tax.

The conditions in Germany are the direct result of the Balkan war and the fear of the creation of a strong anti-Teuton alliance in the Balkan peninsula which would disturb the balance of European power and threaten the triple alliance, hence the military tax was voted. The great increase of the army has been provided for, and in the meantime the cause of the fright has turned out to be a mere nightmare.

Now that the Turks have practically been driven out of Europe, the Balkan federation has become no federation at all but a group of hot tempered little states, much more eager to fly at each other's throats than to meddle in the big game of European politics. As a matter of fact, Germany has furnished an object lesson of the danger and folly of running a government on the principal of militarism.

CANADIAN IMMIGRATION

Few people appreciate the enormous tide of immigration pouring into Canada. During the last decade the immigration into the country has been great, but instead of decreasing it seems to grow heavier each month. It is a most desirable class of immigration, too, considerable better than that which is received in the United states. Canadians want immigrants from England, Scotland, and the northern countries of Europe. Instead of simply depending upon luck and chance, as the Americans have done, we set to work in a business-like manner to get what we want. Our success in obtaining it has been amazing.

Since the opening of navigation on the St. Lawrence this season one of the most extraordinary immigration movements in the history of modern civilization is taking place. Each week during that time the Canadian Pacific Railway has carried on an average towards the Northwest 7,000 immigrants. Of course, the Canadian Pacific is merely one conduit through which this tidal wave of immigration is flowing, but it is the most conspicuous one. Trans-Atlantic passenger steamers arriving in Quebec and Montreal discharge their human freight as quickly as practical, and are outward bound again with the least delay for another cargo for the latest El Dorado of the New World.

A few weeks ago three steamers sailed from the Mersey the same day, and almost at the same hour, with 3,000 immigrants, while 1,200 were left behind who could not secure passage by these particular steamers. These figures are exclusive of numbers that have arrived in New York, en route for Canada over the New York Central and of those who have arrived in Vancouver from Australia, Tasmania, etc.

KEEP FLIES AWAY FROM BABIES

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Officially, a campaign has been set forth against flies, and the highest authorities lay stress on the necessity of warring against them. It must be that the house fly as a death distributor is only recently discovered, along with a lot of other fool things. If all this is true, how in the name of common sense did you or I escape? Flies have an affinity for babies, we know, and years gone few families had even screens to keep them out. Just as many babies were born, even more, than today, and they grew up into strong and healthy men and women.

The stable fly, however, is different and I take exception to him. If, as said, the stable fly is responsible for infant paralysis, the law should be very strict concerning it, and measures taken at once to protect all babies.

A Father.

Kaufman's Epigrams

Mr. Herbert Kaufman, the American writer, is a master of the art of neat epigram. For example:

"Dream to the stars—fling your fares a thousand miles."

"History is the diary of barbarism—the chronicles of civilization are yet to be written."

"A rule is to be only respected until it can be rejected."

"Limits do not exist except in confidence."

"Time is constantly taming into reality our forefathers' wildest guesses."

"Failure isn't a disease of locality—it's a personal habit."

"Half of greatness is grit."

"Self-satisfaction is a rust."

"There's plenty of room for a sky-scraping career—most men are building shanty lives."

The Cold Pack

A cold pack is a fine home substitute for a Turkish bath when such treatment is indicated. It is an ideal way to get up a good, healthy reaction when the circulation is sluggish.

Wrap the patient, naked, in a sheet wrung out of cold water, then wrap patient and sheet in several blankets or in a blanket and a quilt. Swathe him like a mummy. Presently, he will be as warm as toast. After an hour or two the pack should be removed, taking care that the patient is not chilled. A good rub down and then a long sleep will finish the job.

SPORTING NEWS

TENNIS.

New York, June 25.—W. M. Washburn, the young Harvard expert, and T. R. Bell, the Olympic player, won their places in the final and cup round of the Metropolitan lawn tennis championship singles on the turf courts of the West Side club.

RING.

Buffalo News: Ever notice how a promising fighter or champion goes back after the first knockout? asks Billy Nolan. They rarely come back.

Take the case of Jack Dempsey, "Nonpareil," they called him — probably the greatest master of the Queensbury game. He was the only champion boxer who started out as a wrestler.

Dempsey never scaled over 142-145 in the ring, and was called upon to meet men weighing 164 pounds—the weight limit in those days. Had this marvelous fighting machine been managed along the lines of present day champions, he would have retired undefeated.

Gaze over Dempsey's record under London prize ring rules, on the turf with bare knucks, then review his padded mitt encounters, paying particular attention to the size of the men he met. Now review Fitzsimmons', Gans' and other records.

Your decision is bound to be that Jack Dempsey was the greatest pugilist that ever climbed over a rope.

Jack received his first repulse from George LaBlanche. Defeat humiliated him. His heart was broken. His confidence in himself was destroyed. The indescribable effect of defeat refused to vanish, and he was decisively beaten by Fitzsimmons in his next big fight.

Wolgast is another example of what defeat will do for a man who has always been successful. Willie Ritchie was the first man that stood toe to toe with him and forced him to quit fighting in the center of the ring, later sending him to the floor in a dazed condition on the verge of collapse.

To save himself from the humiliation of a knockout Wolgast fouled. This was the first time the Cadillac boy realized that he had met his master. In later battles critics said he lacked the old do or die fighting spirit.

YACHTING.

Boston, June 25.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels has approved attaching a naval officer to the power squadron of the Boston Yacht Club with a view to future use of the boats as a reserve auxiliary to the navy. The officer is to give instruction in manoeuvres and offer suggestions where they may be deemed necessary in order to secure the highest possible efficiency. The squadron, perhaps the first in this country to perform evolutions by means of code signals, now numbers 36 enthusiastic yachtsmen, and was created by Roger Upton, vice-commodore of the Boston Yacht Club, and commander of the squadron, which enrolls some of the largest and best equipped cruisers in Massachusetts waters.

BASEBALL.

Chicago, June 26.—Heine Zimmerman, the hard-hitting third baseman of the Chicago Nationals, will receive a $100 bill from an enthusiastic admirer if he can behave on the baseball field for the next two weeks. The bill, cut in two, was sent to the sporting editor of a local newspaper by a follower of the game, and one half of it will be handed to the belligerent ball player today. It is worthless without the other half, which Heine will receive if he avoids being put out of the game by the umpire during the next 14 days.

The maker of this unique proposition said in his letter that "two weeks living in harmony with umpires will do everybody a lot of good; Zim, most of all."

So far this season, Zimmerman has been put out of the game five times; three times in the last week. "Hand me half of that bill and watch me get the other," said Zimmerman, when told of the offer. "I'm through fussing with umpires anyway, and don't intend to be put out of the game again this season. I'll be a model on the ball field hereafter."

"Zim" performed very calmly in this afternoon's game.

Columbus, Ohio, June 25.—Several women fainted and a large crowd was thrown into a panic when Pitcher George McQuillan of the Columbus American Association team was struck under the left eye by a ball on a line drive here Saturday. It was believed the pitcher had been killed. He soon regained consciousness, however. The accident came in the second inning of a game with Minneapolis.

McGraw says: Another week of the American League fight has thoroughly convinced me that the Athletics are likely to run away with the flag unless somebody hops on their trail very soon. For a time it seemed as if Cleveland might do the job, but Mack's club got away with fifteen straight games. No club in the league seems to be able to stop them.

It was predicted that the Athletics would lack pitchers this years. "Bonnie" has turned up a lot of promising youngsters who are drilling their way through the league in excellent style. With the veterans, Bender and Plank, at their best, John Coombs, once the backbone of the staff, is scarcely missed. Mack is cleverly jockeying his two veterans and youngsters to get the most possible out of each.

The careful observer will have noted that when a young pitcher has worked through five or six innings and the club has attained a lead of two or three runs, Mack hurls Bender or Plank against the enemy to finish it out and make it sure. Behind the pitching the players are traveling like fiends. A lot of them missed the world series money last fall which they had enjoyed for two years. They want it this time. You cannot blame them.

NAPS GOING NICE, BUT LACK ATHLETICS' STAMINA.

The Cleveland team is making a great fight and is practically the only one left in the running with the Athletics now. Birmingham has injected the scrap into the club and the men are resisting everything behind excellent pitching, probably the best in the league. But, as I have said before, Birmingham's team has not the stamina and balance possessed by the Athletics.

BIKE

Philadelphia, June 25. — George Wiley, of Syracuse, N. Y., broke the American mark for one hour's continuous riding at the Point Breeze Velodrome, last night. Wiley covered 47¼ miles in his 60 minutes of cycling, just 2 miles miles and 200 yds. greater than the previous record.

GETTING DISCOURAGED: Part 3. An operation was ordered and in two months later another and again in six months, still another. They had a well stocked farm and a fair bank account when she first complained of stomach trouble. Constipation had been persistent for a long time. Ulceration was the diagnosis when coiled down. In all, during the two years following the first call of the doctor there were six operations, over a year's hospital service, besides all the pain, suffering and anxiety. I will let you guess at the expense item. Throughout it all, however, she never lost courage, but remained bright and cheerful.

Without telling me all she had gone through, but simply describing the symptoms and saying that she had been told that she had ulceration of the stomach and bowels, and wanted to know if there was anything she could do to help herself, I suggest that she make a certain herb tea, composed of Myrrh, Goldenseal and Ginger, as described on page 80 of Vol. 5 of the Home Health Club books and at the same time to get about 10 cents worth of slippery elm bark, soak it in cold water, take that also according to the directions given in the same book. She had the book and I heard no more from her for several months, but, oh, what a flood of gratitude came in the letter. She was not only at home and well but was doing her housework and as happy as the days were long.

The total cost of all the herbs she used did not amount to much over one dollar, and just to think there was the cure, right there, all the time, so simple, so easy and had it not been for her courage I belive she would not have survived the terrible suffering she was forced to undergo. I wish I could tell to the whole world the wonderful power that is at hand, all the time in the humble wayside plants if they will only use the. Don't get discouraged, look up and smile.

CLUB NOTES

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5039 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago. Send full name and address, with 4 cents postage.

Dear Doctor:—My periods stopped in February and since then I have had severe pains and soreness in the lower part of the abdomen, my back is tired and sore from the shoulder blades down. Please state the cause and a cure.

M. J. L.

It is possible that a slight degree of infection occurred at the time of the birth of your last child. This would account for the presence of the pain and soreness described. If such is not the case, that probability is that, as a result of exposure to cold at the critical time, a congested condition has developed in the pelvic organs. In order to lessen this congestion and pain you should use Sitz baths, as hot as can be borne, of twenty minutes duration, each of the three evenings preceding the expected periods. The bowels should be kept freely open, and if you can obtain at your drug store a fluid extract of Smart Weed, this may be taken in one-half teaspoonful doses followed by a cup of hot water every two hours during the three days mentioned. A combination of simple vegetable remedies of this nature is put up by many different wholesalers, who handle them in slightly different proportions and compositions. Some such remedies should be taken for two or three months regularly. During the actual attacks of Dysmenorrhea, as this condition is called, relief may be obtained by hot fomentations to the abdomen or by the use of a cold pack to the abdomen while the limbs are developed in a large hot fomentation.

Dear Doctor:—I am so extremely nervous that I dread to go out among friends. The muscles of my face and neck twitch and contract. I feel it but do not seem to be able to control it. I am perfectly normal otherwise with the exception of some slightly minor ailments. The muscles of my chin and throat are overdeveloped as a result of the constant exercise. I can seem to control it perhaps a fraction of a second but finally have to give in. There have been times when it was scarcely noticeable and other when it grows much worse.

D.A.

This is a form of nervous affection, which is known by the rather peculiar name of Tic. It is, of course, found in only those of highly nervous temperament, and is closely related to other Neurasthenic states. The only permanent cure for this condition consists in a form of retraining of the mind so that complete control over the nerves is regained. It is usually of no use to try to make any effort of the will to control such movements, as thereby the attention is only directed more closely to them. You must make an effort to forget it entirely, act as though it was not present at all and cultivate in general a more cheerful and self-confident frame of mind. The reason that it comes on when you are nervous, as you undoubtedly notice, is simply that you have become convinced that you cannot control it or get rid of it and expect it to appear. Such an expectant form of attention induces such movements in those who have become subject to them. A study of the treatise on Dynamic Magnetism contained in Vol. 2 and a practice of the exercises therein given will help in overcoming this annoying habit.

Dear Doctor:—In reading the club notes I have been interested in simple home cures, but have not seen anything about a simple remedy and its wondrous effects of which I have personal knowledge. It is a poultice of red beets. The beets should be grated and applied over sores in a thick mass, as soon as warm, change to a freshly grated one, continuing until relief is obtained. It acted like magic when used in the case of what our doctor said was blood poisoning in one of my children also in the case of lock jaw in a young man, who had shot himself in the foot. We have also used it very often in the treatment of sores on horses.

T. M.

Many such simple remedies exist and in a number of cases are just as effective as so called scientific treatment [illegible]

THE RECIPE BOOK

Soup With Noodles—Vegetable or meat soup with noodles is relished occasionally. For noodles, beat one egg, and add a pinch of salt and flour enough to make a stiff dough. Roll out in a thin sheet, dredge with flour to keep from sticking. Next, roll up this thin sheet as you would a jelly cake and slice very fine. One half hour before the soup is served add the noodles.

Canned Rhubarb—Rhubarb may be canned in cold water. Fit freshly cut stalks into a clean jar. Let the water run full force into the jar for 10 minutes till air is excluded. Screw on the top while the jar is still under water. Be sure that it is perfectly air-tight. The contents should keep and be just like fresh rhubarb.

Stuffed Potatoes—Bake the potatoes When they are done, take out of the oven, cut in halves and scoop out of their jackets. Mash with butter until they are smooth; pepper and salt. Put them back again into their jackets. Put them into the oven for a few minutes to heat and brown on the top.

Baked Hominy—Mash enough left over hominy to fill an ordinary baking dish, after all lumps are eliminated Add two eggs, one tablespoonful of flour, with one teaspoonful of baking powder, salt, pepper and about half a cupful of milk, to make a stiff batter. Put all this in a dish and bake three-quarters of an hour.

Bread Pudding—Pour two cupfuls of boiling milk over half an ordinary loaf of stale bread. Mash this mixture until smooth and add one tablespoonful of butter. Add three well-beaten eggs, when this is cold, one half cupful of white sugar, a little nutmeg, one teaspoonful of vanilla, and one cupful of mixed citron, seeded raisins and currants. Bake or boil about three-quarters of an hour. Serve hot, with or without hard sauce.

EAT PINEAPPLES

They Have Splendid Medicinal as Well as Food Value

The properties of the pineapple are extremely healthful, its contents of pepsin being of so high an average that, of all the fruits, it takes the highest rank among those possessing the qualities that aid digestion. It is a highly beneficial food-medicine, as well as a delightful fruit.

A quarter of a pineapple, taken at breakfast, affords more tonic than two grapefruits. A glass of the juice of a fresh apple, taken during a heavy meal, would furnish pepsin enough to make the after-dinner pepsin tablet unnecessary. Pineapple juice is a drink practically unknown to Canadians but the people of South America, where the pineapples often sell for less than one cent each, drink vast quantities of the fresh pineapple juice. With a little sugar, it makes the most palatable and soothing drink imaginable.

NOW IT'S LEAD EARRINGS

But They Are Worn Betweentimes to Make Ears Beautiful

Somebody has discovered that an ear, to be truly beautiful, must have a round lobe. It may be a perfectly good ear in its business relations, but unless it droops at the bottom it is of no use as an ornament. As might be expected, women are more agitated over this discovery than men. A society girl has even set about to improve the shape of her auricular appendages through the simple device for attaching weights to them. For this purpose she has had a pair of lead "sinkers" of the type that fishermen tie on their lines made into earrings. These earrings she wears around the house and at night, removing them, of course, when callers are announced. She has confided to her close friends that the result is all that can be desired and she expects soon to have a beautiful pair of ears.

FISHERMEN'S "SINKERS" WILL DO

Browned flour will impart flavor and coloring and make soups and gravies especially good.

DR. FRIEDMAN

Doctor Friedmann, the German tuberculosis specialist, stands about 5 feet 10 inches in height, of medium build, straight as an arrow, and one would imagine from his movements that he is of a highly strung temperament. Bluish grey eyes, which when he is in conversation reflect the expression of the ideas he is conveying by speech, sometimes sparkling in their brightness, again at rest as the idea passes away in speech. Often you can notice the far-away look of the man whose thoughts are away from his immediate surroundings, presumably upon his great task of beating the white scourge, and then when he is called again to the surroundings in which he is at the moment, starts as if he had totally forgotten them. He has a black moustache and dark hair, but withal a kindly expression upon his features which couldn't fail to attract, and which is often lit up by a smile as he speaks. He is crammed full of nervous energy, his whole aim in the success of his work and occasionally their is a set look on his features as if nature demanded a little rest from his exertions.

DIABETES CURED —THE PROOF

We have proof of cases of Diabetes that have been cured by SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES when the patient had been a sufferer from the disease for fifteen (15) years. This remedy is particularly efficacious in cases in which open wounds, add to the sufferings of the patient. It has cured the most stubborn cases after all the usual remedies and diets have signally failed.

We have scores of confidential letters from grateful patients who have found relief in Sanol's Anti-Diabetes. These letters do not come from people in distant parts, but from residents of western cities and towns. They are convincing.

—Sanol's Anti-Diabetes is no common remedy—it is different from the usual—it is a specific and scientific remedy, prepared for the relief and cure of one disease and one only.

A well-known Government official of British Columbia (whose name will be given in confidence) writes us that on June 12th he commenced the use of SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, and that on June the 18th his urine was free of sugar. To prove that wonderful statement he sent us the certificates of the chemist's analysis. "The result," he says, "I regard as highly gratifying."

PAID FOR HIS WIFE

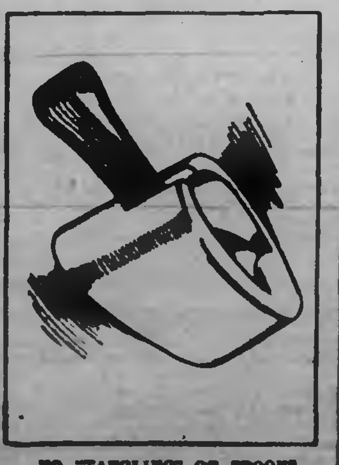
Barter and Sale of a Woman in a London Court

A London cable says: The barter and sale of a woman for $27,500 was arranged in the courts here yesterday by the authority of a judge. The case was that of a divorce suit brought by Marcellus Raymund Moraud against his wife, Helene Woodley Moraud, both actors. J. A. Morrison, inheritor of the Morrison millions, was named as co-respondent. The suit was undefended, and counsel stated that it had been agreed that Morrison should pay Moraud $27,500 damages. Mr. Justice Bargrave Deane, addressing the jury, said: "The parties have agreed as to damages. The co-respondent is prepared to pay the amount, and the petitioner is satisfied to receive the sum. If there were something behind the arrangement I should tell you not to listen to it, but in this case, as far as I can see, there is nothing objectionable. Capt. Morrison practically bought this woman for $27,500.

NEW SPOONHOLDER

Will Not Upset and Contents Are Always in Neat Design

To the old-fashioned spoonholder several objections have been raised; none of them serious but they set a young jeweler to thinking and he designed a holder which overcomes them. One objection to the old type of receptacle was the ease with which it overturned and spilled its contents on the table. Another fault was the manner in which the spoons sometimes became entangled so that when you removed one you brought others with it.



NO "TANGLING" OF SPOONS

The holder shown herewith has a relatively long base and is quite stable. The interior is in the general shape of the bowl of a spoon and the latter fits smoothly into it, with the handle projecting through a slot. As each spoon is put into the holder it rests snugly upon the one below it and a neat pile is formed. Of course, the holder is made in different sizes for different size spoons.

Improved German Farming

Germany was losing more than a million of her sons and daughters every year, simply because her soil could not support an increased population. But Germany went to work and in 30 years increased her wheat yield from 20 (which is more than our average) to 40 bushels an acre. She did it in one way, for example, by planting beet crops which renewed the soil, and at the same time gave her so much raw material for sugar that she now exports that article. Thus she killed two birds with one stone.

The recent census of New York has established that out of a total population of 3,500,000 there are not more than 737,447 real Americans—that is to say, persons born in America of American parents. The rest are divided into 630,000 Germans, 596,316 Irish, 262,064 Austro-Hungarians, and so on. In the light of such figures, New York is in point of German population third in rank as a German city; also is the greatest Irish city, and fourth Austro-Hungarian city. As a German city, New York is only surpassed by Berlin and Hamburg. New York is also a great Jewish centre, as its Hebrew population numbers [illegible]. RUBBER FROM VEGETABLES

Corn and Potatoes Said to Produce Good Artificial Article

One of the most far-reaching triumphs ever achieved in industrial chemistry has been gained by a group of English scientists after a most strenuous contest with German rivals. The practical result of the discovery announced by Professor Perkins, of Manchester University, is that rubber can be commercially manufactured from starch derived from corn, potatoes, and other vegetables.

Hitherto rubber has been a natural product derived from rubber plantations in various tropical and subtropical countries by a slow and laborious process. Now by a triumph of creative chemistry it is possible to manufacture it from farm-grown products.

By the ordinary process of fermentation and distillation of grain and potatoes the raw products are converted into a starchy liquid from which alcohol is distilled, and fusel oil is a by-product. To produce cheap rubber it was necessarily to obtain fusel oil cheaply and plentifully and alcohol had also to be dispensed.

To secure all this a new method had to be evolved; and after eighteen months' work in co-operation with Professor Fernbach, a French scientist, a new process of fermentation was discovered which permitted fusel oil being economically manufactured from starchy substances.

This "synthetic" rubber is said to be identical with natural rubber in chemical composition and all its properties. The annual production of rubber is now valued at about $200,000,000 and it will readily be seen how important commercially the new article will be if it can be proven that the artificial rubber is the equal in every way of the natural product.

IMPORTANT WORK OF PARTY WHIPS

They Have Much to do on the Inner Side of Parliamentary Life

In the good old days when red-faced squires rode to hounds in the fine old English fashion, an active gentleman, armed with much authority and a long lashed whip, was a necessary accompaniment to each successful hunt. He was known as the "whipper in," and his duty was to put the fear of man into the hearts of such ill-bred hounds as preferred rabbits and the neighbors' chickens to the more orthodox delights of the chase.

To-day in all Parliaments there is a survival of the old whipper-in. They have cut his name to "whip," and the naughty hounds are represented by less active, but none the less fractious, members of Parliament. He is not allowed to use a whip on the flock he directs, but he has forces at his control that are much more powerful.

The whip is the most influential of the private members of the House. Indeed on the floor of the House he is supreme next to the leader of the Government. All the parties represented in the House have their whips, but the whip of the party in power is of course the most influential. His first duty is to see that there are always enough members of his own party ready to vote to prevent a defeat at any division that may come on unexpectedly.

In the British Parliament the chief Government whip is also the administrator of the patronage which remains to the Prime Minister, and for this service—nominally—he is paid an annual salary of $10,000. Assistant whips get $5,000.

No Sinecure Here

In Canada the whips get no additional salary paid by the country. Each party is of course at liberty to pay its whips if it pleases. The only perquisites which Canadian whips enjoy are a private office and a secretary whose salary is paid by Parliament. Beside the chief whips there are assistants to the chief, as well as whips for each of the Provinces.

Being a whip is about as restful a job as being a train-despatcher. From the time the House meets until it rises again he is "on the job." He must know where his members are, he must see that they do not get out of touch, and he must have a fairly shrewd idea of what the other side has up its sleeve. Without a certain amount of understanding between the whips of the different parties it would be impossible to carry on the business of the House. As a matter of fact the whips are usually the best of friends, and one who has strict ideas about party lines would often be shocked by the evidences of good fellowship displayed amongst them.

Needs Tactful Men

One thing that a successful whip must have is tact. Take the case of a late night sitting without anything important in sight. The majority of members are not interested in the subject under discussion, and naturally thoughts of bed loom large as the clock hands crawl round. It is all very well so long as a sufficient number of members on the other side feel that way too, but it will never do for the Government whip to let too many of his men leave the building so long as there is the least chance that the Opposition will take advantage of their absence and spring a vote. Then his tact comes into play. He must make each member feel that he is personally responsible for his party's safety. In such a case, or in cases where members are called out of town, "pairs" are arranged, and the pair is a necessity of Parliamentary procedure. John Smith finds that he has to leave the city where Parliament is sitting. Knowing that he will be away for some time, he goes to the whip and arranges with him that his name will be paired with that of William Jones, another legislator, who will be away. The same thing occurs when men get tired and go home to bed. All this necessitates constant supervision on the part of the whips.

On Division

When the division bells ring, then the whip bursts into the greatest activity. From every hole and corner of the building members are hunted up and marshalled in the corridors or sent into their seats. When the whips are sure that all the men they can get together are ready, they arrange them in two parallel lines, and march into the chamber, bringing up the rear like a pair of sheep dogs with their flocks in front. Their appearance is always the signal for cheers and thumps on the desk, a little ceremony as old as Parliament itself. Then the whip has to keep careful watch as the vote is read over. With his division list in front of him he checks over each name as it is called out, sees, too, that the other side lives up to its agreement as regards the pairs.

BULGARIA'S KING

Although a somewhat strong-minded, ambitious despot, King Ferdinand of Bulgaria is a man of simple tastes, and nothing delights him more than to leave Sofia and state troubles behind him and go to his beautiful summer palace at Varna, on the Black Sea, and indulge in his zoological and botanical studies. He is an accomplished naturalist, and spends much time classifying insects and plants. He catalogued nearly all the flora and fauna of Bulgaria, and in Sofia established a zoological garden at his own expense.

The manner in which King Ferdinand came to the throne is one of the romance of modern history. He was merely a half-pay lieutenant in the Hussars in the Austrian service when, in 1887, the Bulgarian National Assembly elected him to succeed Prince Alexander of Battenberg, who had abdicated.

Many were the plots put forward to assassinate King Ferdinand when he succeeded Prince Alexander to the throne, but they all failed, although the assassins killed Stambouloff, who was to Bulgaria what Bismarck was to Germany. Ultimately the manner in which King Ferdinand developed the country for his subjects' good, set up a proper educational system, a network of railways, and plenty of good roads and canals, encouraged agriculture and town building, and raised the army to the highest pitch of perfection, won the admiration and loyalty of all his subjects.

LOOK TO CANADA FOR A NEW START

How the London Emigration Officials Sift the Fit From the Unfit Would-be Canadians

A visit to the various Canadian emigration offices in London brings one into contact with the many types of Britons who are contemplating settlement in the Dominion and affords an interesting insight into the methods of selection adopted by the officials.

What kind of men and women are these candidates for a new life in a new country? The best and perhaps the worst types. It is the business of the emigration officials to see that only the best go. Here is a prematurely old man, he says he is 40; his face speaks of the privations and troubles of three score years. With earnestness that is pathetic, he pleads that he is able and willing to take up the arduous work of a Canadian farm. Indeed it is his only escape from starvation, for he cannot obtain work in the old land. This "case" can be decided instantly. To the discerning official his undeveloped physique and enfeebled frame render him unfit for Canadian farming.

The next is of the right type. A country lad, 16 years old; a six footer with the thews and muscles of one who has guided the plough from early boyhood. He is from Somersetshire where he earned $3 a week and kept himself and he is after $30 a month and board in Canada. This man is secured right away.

The "Know-all"

Along comes a type which is not liked very much in Canada, at least until he has learned not to emphasize his opinions. With all the assertiveness of the Londoner he, even at this stage, tells the man he has come to for information what he knows about Canada. In a mental vision one can see him telling the Canadian farmer "the best way to do it." The official loses no time in assuring him that his best interests will be served if he is prepared to do things in the way Canadians want them done. "Excellent material," says the official, "he will be all right after a few months in the Dominion."

Then, there is the country gentleman with property who is disposing of his estate which has been in the family for centuries. Here is an old colonel, sunburnt from a score of years in India. He wants his son to go to Canada. "I don't want him pampered, sir, but if he gets in with the right people he will succeed," says the old soldier.

The Case of the Women

A deeper note is struck with the women. Here is one from London's fashionable quarter. Cultured and with the poise of a woman of breeding she is concerned about her son and wants him to go to Canada for his own good. A mother's tragedy is here. If he can get away from his "set" he will be all right. And so the prairies offer the solution, and the mother's pain of parting from her boy is lost in the feeling that if he remains the future will hold a greater grief.

Then we see a woman with a family of no less than eight children. The official's eyes glisten when he hears this. They are country born; robust and healthy. One sturdy youngster of 16 has the sinews of a man, and he is prepared to take the place as breadwinner of the father, who is dead. They are all right and Canada will welcome them. A brave wife whose husband has lost heart in the unsuccessful struggle for a living is the next candidate. She is prepared to mend the family fortunes by taking a place as a domestic servant in Canada.

And so on in an endless procession. One is welcomed; another is warned not to go to Canada. In this way the officials prevent many undesirables from reaching the Dominion. It is the most interesting and perhaps the most valuable Canadian work done in Great Britain.

PROVE THE BLIND SPOT

Experiment at Home and Convince Yourself of This

In every eye there is a little spot that is totally blind. Young eyes, old eyes, sharp eyes, dull eyes, blue, brown or black eyes—all of them, even the most perfect, have in each retina a little round spot which is wholly blind, both to brightness and color. This spot is located just at the point where the optic nerve enters, and is approximately one-twelfth of an inch wide.

Several interesting experiments can be made to prove the presence of this blind spot. For example, cover the right eye with the hand or a bandage and gaze with the left eye steadily at a point on the wall or screen about seven feet distant. Let another person be seated against the wall on your left-hand side in such a position that his forehead is on a level with the point at which you are gazing and his nearer cheek about twenty inches distant from it. Do not turn your eyeball, but gaze steadily, as at first, and his face will entirely disappear, and the wall will seem to be perfectly blank. If you spread a sheet of paper on the wall and note the joints at which a pencil moved back and forth by another person appears and disappears, you will be able to make an accurate map of the blind spot as projected on the wall.

Another experiment is performed by painting nine large letters in three vertical columns of three letters each, upon a sheet of paper. Hold the paper at such a distance and in such a position before the eye that the central letter of the square falls within the blind spot, while the surrounding eight letters are still visible.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 2. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith detains Thorne while the prisoner is sent for. An order comes from General Varney for Wilfred to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

CHAPTER IX—The prisoner is thrust into the room alone with Thorne, who recognizes him as his older brother, Henry Dumont. They put up a fake fight. Henry implores his brother to shoot him in the leg. Thorne refuses and Henry accidentally kills himself. Arrelsford rushes into the room with the guard. Thorne nonchalantly says: "Corporal, here is your prisoner, we had a fight and I shot him."

CHAPTER X—Caroline goes to the war department telegraph office to send a message.

CHAPTER XI—Arrelsford refuses to let Caroline's message go through. It is a telegram to Wilfred simply asking forgiveness, but Arrelsford suspects a double meaning. He and Edith secrete themselves to watch Thorne, whose arrival Arrelsford expects.

CHAPTER XII—Thorne takes charge of the telegraph office and after satisfying himself that he is alone attempts to send a message, but is interrupted by the arrival of a messenger from the secretary of war with a dispatch.

CHAPTER XIII—Arrelsford and Edith see Thorne alter the secretary's dispatch. Thorne is shot in the wrist by Arrelsford when he attempts to send it. Arrelsford calls the guard, and when they appear Thorne turns the tables by ordering the arrest of Arrelsford.

CHAPTER XIV—The removal of Arrelsford is stopped by the arrival of General Randolph. Thorne again begins sending the dispatch. Arrelsford protests, declaring Thorne is sending a forged order to weaken the lines of defense. Randolph demands upon what authority Thorne has assumed command of the telegraph office. Miss Varney appears.

"Beg pardon, general, this delay will be most disastrous. Permit me to go on with this message. If there's any mistake, we can rectify it afterward."

He seized the key and continued sending the message as he spoke.

"No!" cried Arrelsford.

General Randolph either did not hear Thorne's speech or heed it, or else he did not care to prevent him, and he continued his questioning.

"Where did you get this mistaken order?" he asked.

But Arrelsford, intensely alive to what was going on, interposed.

"He's at it again, sir!"

"Halt, there!" said General Randolph. "I ordered you to wait."

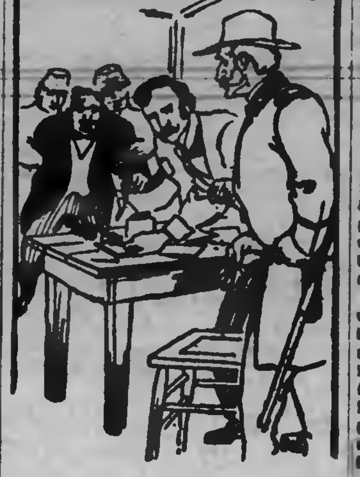
The dispatch was almost complete. Thorne ground his teeth with rage in his impatience. He had tried audacity before, he would try it again.

"I was sent here to attend to the business of this office and that business is going out," he said resolutely.

"No," said General Randolph with equal firmness, "it is not going out until I am ready for it."

"My orders came from the war department, not from you, sir. This dispatch came in half an hour ago," answered Thorne angrily, his voice rising, "they are calling for it at the other end of the line. It's my business to send it out and I am going to do it."

"Stop!" said General Randolph, as Thorne began to send the message



"Silence, Sir," Thundered Randolph.

again. "Sergeant, seize that man and keep him from that machine."

Well, the last hope was gone. As the sergeant stepped forward to execute his orders, Thorne, desperately determined to the last, clicked out a letter, but he was cut short in the middle of a word. The sergeant and two men dragged him away, chair and all, from the table, and two others posted themselves in front of the key.

"I will have you court-martialed for this, sir," said General Randolph angrily.

"You will have to answer yourself," cried Thorne, playing the game to the last, "for the delay of a dispatch of vital importance, sent by the secretary of war."

"Do you mean that?" cried Randolph.

"I mean just that," answered Thorne, "and I demand that you let me proceed with the business of this office. Before these officers and men I repeat that demand."

"By what authority do you send that dispatch?"

"I refer you to the department, sir."

"Show me your orders for taking charge of this office."

"I refer you to the department, sir," answered Thorne stubbornly.

"By God, sir!" continued General Randolph hotly. "I will refer to the department. Leave your men on guard there, sergeant. Go over to the war office. My compliments to the secretary of war, and ask him if he will be so good as to—"

But Arrelsford's evil genius prompted him to interpose again. When affairs were going to his liking he should have let them alone, but fate seemed to be playing into his hand, and he determined to make the most of it and the chance.

"Another witness! Miss Varney,"

"Captain Thorne Has the Highest Authority in This Office."

he cried triumphantly, as he bowed toward the window in which Edith had at that moment appeared. "She was here with me, she saw it all. Ask her."

General Randolph turned toward the window and in his turn bowed to the girl.

"Miss Varney," he asked courteously, "do you know anything about this?"

"About what, sir?" answered Edith in a low voice.

"Mr. Arrelsford claims that Captain Thorne is acting without authority in this office and that you can testify to that effect," was the general's answer.

CHAPTER XV.

Love and Duty at the Touch.

Thorne's case was now absolutely hopeless. By the testimony of two witnesses a thing is established. All that Arrelsford had seen Edith had seen. All that he knew, she knew. She had only to speak and the plan had failed; the cleverly constructed scheme would fall to pieces. His brother's life would have been wasted, nay more, his own life also; for well did he realize that the bold way he had played the game would the more certainly hasten his immediate execution. A spy in the Confederate capital!

He could reproach himself with nothing. He had done his very best. An ordinary man would have failed a dozen times in the struggle. Courage, adroitness, resourcefulness, and good fortune had carried him so far, but the odds were now heavily against him and nothing that he could do would avail him anything. The game was played and he had lost; Arrelsford had triumphed.

Thorne, in the one word that Edith Varney was to speak, would lose life, honor and that for which he had risked both. And he would lose more than that. He would lose the love of the woman who had never seemed so beautiful to him as she stood there, pale-faced, erect, the very incarnation of self-sacrifice, as were all the women of the Confederacy. And he would lose more than her love. He would lose her respect. His humiliation would be her humiliation. Never so long as she lived could her mind dwell on him with tenderness.

His condition was indeed pitiable; yet, to do him justice, his thoughts were not so much for himself as they were for two other things. First and foremost bulked largest before him the plan for which he had made all his sacrifice, which had promised to end the weary months of siege which Richmond and Petersburg had sustained. His brother had lost his life, no more than suspected, in the endeavor to carry it out, and now he had failed. That was a natural humiliation and reproach to his pride, although as his mind went back over the scene he could detect no false move on his part. Of course his allowing his love for Edith Varney to get the mastery of him had been wrong under the circumstances, but that had not affected the failure or success of his endeavors.

And his thoughts also were for the woman. He knew that she loved him, she had admitted it, but once his eyes had been opened, he could have told it without any admission at all. All that he had suffered, she had suffered, and more. If she would be compelled to apologize for him, she would also be compelled to assume the defensive for him. She loved him and she was placed in the fearful position of having to deal the blow. The words which would presently fall from her lips would complete his undoing. They would blast his reputation forever and send him to his death. He knew they would not be easy words for her to speak. He knew that whatever his merit or demerit, she would never forget that it was she who had completed his ruin; the fact that she would also ruin the plan against her country would not weigh very heavily in her breaking heart against that present personal consideration—after a while maybe but not at first. And therefore he pitied her.

He drew himself erect to meet his fate like a man and waited. The wait was a long one. Edith Varney was having her own troubles. She knew as well as anyone the importance of her testimony. She had come from the commissary general's vacant office and had been back at the window long enough to have heard the conversation between General Randolph and the two men. She was an unusually keen-witted girl and she realized the situation to the full.

Her confidence in her lover had been shaken, undermined, restored, and shaken again, until her mind was in a perfect whirl. She did not know, she could not tell whether he was what he seemed to be or not. It seemed like treachery to him, this uncertainty. It would be a simple matter to corroborate Mr. Arrelsford at once, and it occurred to her that she had no option. But coincident with the question flashed into her mind something she had forgotten which made it possible for her to answer in another way. Thus, she understood that the life of her lover hung upon her decision.

Her eyes flashed quickly from the vindictive yet triumphant fact of Arrelsford, whom she loathed, to the pale, composed, set face of Thorne, whom she loved, and her glance fell upon his wounded left wrist, tied up, the blood oozing through the handkerchief. A wave of sympathy and tenderness filled her breast. He was hurt, suffering—that decided her.

With one brief, voiceless prayer to God for guidance, she turned to General Randolph, and it was well that she spoke when she did, for the pause had become insupportable to Thorne at least. He had made up his mind to relieve the dilemma and confess his guilt so that the girl would not have to reproach herself with a betrayal of her lover or her cause, that she might not feel that she had been found wanting at the critical moment. Indeed, Thorne would have done this before but his duty as a soldier enjoined upon him the propriety, the imperative necessity, of playing the game to the very end. The battle was not yet over. It would never be over until he faced the firing party.

And then Edith's voice broke the silence that had become so tense with emotion.

"Mr. Arrelsford is mistaken, General Randolph," she said quietly, "Captain Thorne has the highest authority in this office."

Arrelsford started violently and opened his mouth to speak, but General Randolph silenced him with a look. The blood of the old general was up, and it had become impossible for anyone to presume in the least degree. Thorne started, too. The blood rushed to his heart. He thought he would choke to death. What did the girl mean?

"The highest authority, sir," continued Edith Varney, slowly drawing out the commission, which every one but she had forgotten in the excitement, "the authority of the president of the Confederates States of America."

Well, she had done it for weal or for woe. She had made her decision. Had it been a wise decision? Had she acted for the best? What interest had governed her, love for Thorne, love for her country, or love for her own peace of mind? It was in the hands of General Randolph now. The girl turned slowly away unable to sustain the burning glances of her lover and the vindictive stare of Arrelsford.

"What's this?" said General Randolph. "Umph! A major's commission. In command of the telegraph department. Major Thorne, I congratulate you."

"That commission, General Randolph!" exclaimed Arrelsford, his voice rising. "let me explain how she—"

"That will do from you, sir," said the general, "you have made enough trouble as it is. I suppose you claim that this is a forgery, too—"

"Let me tell you, sir," persisted the secret service agent.

"You have told me enough as it is. Sergeant, take him over to headquarters."

"Fall in there!" cried the sergeant of the guard. "Two of you take the prisoner. Forward march!"

Two men seized Arrelsford, and the rest of them closed about him. To do the man justice, he made a violent struggle and was only marched out at the point of the bayonet, protesting and crying:

"For God's sake, he's in the Yankee secret service! He'll send that dispatch out. His brother brought in the signal tonight!"

All the way down the corridor he could be heard yelling and struggling. General Randolph paid not the slightest attention to him. He stepped over to the telegraph table beside which Thorne stood—and with all the force of which he was capable the young man could hardly control the trembling of his knees.

"Major Thorne," he said reprovingly as Thorne saluted him, "all this delay has been your own fault. If you had only had sense enough to mention this before we would have been saved a damned lot of trouble. There's your commission, sir." He handed it to Thorne, who saluted him again as one in a dream. "Come, gentlemen," he said to his officers, "I can't understand why they have to be so cursed shy about their secret service orders! Lieutenant Foray?"

"Yes, sir."

"Take your orders from Major Thorne."

"Yes, sir," returned Foray.

"Good night," said the general, forgetful of the fact apparently that Edith Varney was still standing by the window.

"Good night, sir," answered Thorne.

Foray moved over to the table at the right, while Thorne leaped to his former position, and his hand sought the key. At last he could send his message, there was nothing to prevent him or interrupt him now, he was in command. Could he get it through? For a moment he forgot everything but that, as he clicked out the call again, but he had scarcely pressed the button when Edith Varney stepped to his side.

"Captain Thorne," she said in a low voice, giving him the old title.

He looked up at her, stopping a moment.

"What I have done gives you time to escape from Richmond," she continued.

"Escape!" whispered Thorne, clicking the key again. "Impossible!"

"Oh," said the girl, laying her hand on his arm, "you wouldn't do it—now!"

And again the man's fingers remained poised over the key as he stared at her.

"I gave it to you to—to save your life. I didn't think you'd use it for anything else. Oh! You wouldn't!"

Her voice in its low whisper was agonizing. If her face had been white before, what could be said of it now? In a flash Thorne saw all. She had been confident of his guilt, and she had sought to save his life because she loved him, and now because she loved her country she sought to save that too.

The call sounded from the table. Thorne turned to it, bent over it, and listened. It was the call for the message. Then he turned to the woman. She looked at him; just one look. The kind of a look that Christ might have turned upon Peter after those denials when he saw him in the courtyard early on that bitter morning of betrayal. "I saved you," the girl's look seemed to say, "I redeemed you and now you betray me!" She spoke no words, words were useless between them. Everything had been said, everything had been done. She could only go. Never woman looked at man nor man looked at woman as these two at each other.

The woman turned, she could trust herself no further. She went blindly toward the door. The man followed her slowly, crushing the commission in his hand, and ever as he went he heard the sound of the call behind him. He stopped halfway between the door and the table and watched her go, and then he turned.

Lieutenant Foray understanding nothing of what had transpired, but hearing the call, had taken Thorne's place before the table. He had the dispatch about which there had been so much trouble, and upon which the whole plan turned, in his hand before him.

"They are calling for that dispatch, sir," he said as Thorne stared at him in agony. "What shall I do with it?"

"Send it," said the other hoarsely.

"Very good, sir," answered Foray, seating himself and taking hold of the key, but the first click of the sounder awakened Thorne to action.

"No, no!" he cried. "Stop!" He rushed forward and seized the dispatch. "I won't do it!" he thundered. With his wounded hand and his well one he tore the dispatch into fragments. "Revoke the order. Tell them it was a mistake instantly. I refuse to act under this commission!"

CHAPTER XVI.

The Tumult in Human Hearts.

Of the frightful nights in Richmond during the siege, that night was one of the worst. The comparative calmness of the earlier hours of repose of the quiet April evening gave way to pandemonium. The works at Petersburg, desperately held by the Confederates, were miles away from the city to the southward, but such was the tremendous nature of the cannonading that the shocking sounds seemed to be close at hand. Children cowered, women shuddered, and old men prayed as they thought of the furious onslaughts in the battle raging.

FOX FARMING

Prices Paid for Breeding Purposes Exceeds Pelt Values

A return of three hundred per cent on the capital involved is what silver farmers in the Maritime Provinces received, according to a report on fur-farming in Canada. The fur value of a silver fox varies from about $300 to about $2,500 according to the quality of the pelt, but the prices paid for foxes for breeding purposes far exceed this. Ultimately the value of the silver fox must be determined by its fur value and not by the prices now being paid for breeders. It is plain, also, that, in the course of a few years, the numerous ranches in process of formation and which are creating such a demand for breeding stock, will be producing pelts for the market. The principal points at which the industry is carried on are around Alberton, Summerside, Charlottetown and Montague in Prince Edward Island; Quebec city in Quebec; Port Elgin in New Brunswick, and Wyoming in Ontario.

LOOK YOUR BEST

A statistics fiend in France the other day announced after years of investigation he could tell the average amount of time woman spends before her mirror between the ages of six and 70. The average per day he proudly announced was about as follows: Six to 10 years, 7 minutes; 10 to 15 years, 15 minutes; 15 to 20 years 22 minutes; 25 to 30 years, 30 minutes; 30 to 35 years, 24 minutes; 30 to 40 years, 18 minutes; 40 to 60 years 15 to 16 minutes. Then he proudly announced that the figures for a lifetime showed that woman spent the total of 242 days before her mirror. To which the answer is—Let her.

MINERAL DRESSES

Some Can be Cleaned by Being Placed in Fire

It has remained for the twentieth century to show us the advantages of garments made of minerals. Incredible as it may seem, stone, iron and even glass are now being manufactured into clothes. The latest novelty in women's dresses is represented by robes of spun glass. The cloth comes in shades of white, green, lilac, pink and yellow. The inventor is an Australian, and the goods are as bright and flexible as silk. The first woman to wear a glass dress was of royal rank. It was of a delicate shade of lavender shot with pink, and its peculiar sheen reminded observers of the sparkle of diamond dust.

The Russians are manufacturing a fabric from the fibre of a filamentous stone from the Siberian mines which is said to be of so durable a nature that it is practically indestructible. The materials is soft to the touch and pliable in the extreme, and when soiled has only to be placed in a fire to be made absolutely clean. Iron cloth is largely used to-day by tailors everywhere for the purpose of making the collars of coats set properly. This cloth is manufactured from steel wool and has the appearance of having been woven from horsehair.

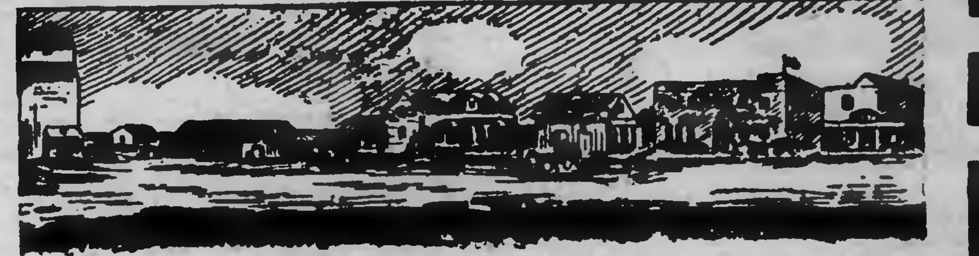
Carmangay

"The Star of Alberta"

PAST The splendidly strategic site of Carmangay was discovered by a far seeing, shrewd railway engineer attracted to the district by the lure of the finest wheat in the Canadian West. He snapped up lands where the wide canyons of the Little Bow River narrows to a point. Here must all railways cross. The C. P. R. came and the shipping centre created went ahead by leaps and bounds.



PRESENT Carmangay today is a thriving incorporated town, with not less than 53 business places. Her up-to-date electric and natural water supply systems are owned and operated by the people. Carmangay boasts an eight-roomed schoolhouse, two banks and four big elevators, shipping over a million bushels in 1911 and 1½ millions in 1912. Carmangay has coal mines operating, and the entire district is underlaid with coal of finest Galt quality.

FUTURE Carmangay grows as Alberta grows. That means a wonderful future. Four new railroads are heading for Carmangay. Four new elevators are trying to cope with the tremendous wheat yields of the district. The mines are opening up splendid prospects. Carmangay is being rapidly developed into one of the greatest towns in the Canadian West. YOU can just as confidently invest in Carmangay as her own people do, who are building in brick and stone for a tremendous future. Carmangay has her own supply of finest brick clay and stone right at her doors, and will soon supply her sister cities in Alberta.

WILL INVESTIGATE THE FISH INDUSTRY IN THE FAR NORTH

Expert Will Visit Hudson Bay to Study Commercial Possibilities of Industry

(Special to The Times.)

Ottawa, June 26—The Government has decided to send a fish expert to the Hudson Bay to make a thorough study of the commercial possibilities of the fish industry of those waters. He will go north on one of the ships taking supplies to Port Nelson and will spend all summer and fall making his investigation. It is believed that the Bay is swarming with fish and that a great industry can be developed. If this is true, with the road to the Bay completed, there will be infinite possibilities for the growth of such an industry with the prairie provinces. It should mean cheap fish for the west, while a market with Europe could be devloped.

The sending of a fish expert to the Bay to study the commercial possibilities of this industry is a sample of the efforts the government is making to develop that great north country. It is hoped when the road is furnished to the Bay there will be traffic at hand to make it pay.

As for the road itself it is being rushed with unwonted vigor. There will leave before July 1 no less than four boats loaded with supplies, lumber, coal and equipment for the building of Port Nelson harbor. A great steel hydraulic dredge will be ready by August 1 and will be towed north to work on the harbor work. By the time the road reaches the water the harbor will be ready for the reception of ships. Work on steel laying is progressing rapidly, and by fall it is expected no less than 165 miles of track will be ready.

UNITED STATES IS AIMING RETALIATORY DUTIES AT US

Effect of Proposed Tariff Changes Described by an Expert at Washington--Wheat and Potatoes are Chiefly Affected

Washington, D.C., June 26.—The American statesmen who are framing the Democratic tariff bill have kept two purposes plainly in view. The first was to give the American people a reduction in the cost of living, and the second was to take away from American manufacturers that protection which has been the usage, under 16 years of Republican and high protective tariff rule, of fostering so-called trusts and monopolies. Yet, through it all, being patriotic Americans, they have tried hard to give no other countries an advantage over their own. Whether they will succeed in the main only the operation of the bill, after it becomes a law, will tell.

For nearly a month the bill has been in the hands of Senator Simmons, a southern Democrat and his committee on finance. When it left the House of Representatives, it was the work of practically one man, Oscar W. Underwood, also a southerner. After making innumerable changes in the bill, the Senate Committee on Finance has submitted it to a caucus of the Democratic members of the Senate, which has also refused to accept Mr. Underwood's and Senator Simmons' views in their entirity, and has made a number of changes. The bill is still in caucus but it is expected it will be submitted to and passed by the Senate within a week or ten days. It is now almost complete as far as the Senate caucus is concerned, but before it finally passes both Houses of Congress it will go to a conference of members of both branches of the House for passage, and, if changed in conference, will be returned to the Senate for final passage. It will then require only President Wilson's signature to make it a law.

POINCARE LEFT WREATH ON TOMB OF QUEEN VICTORIA

Then French President Went to Horse Show With Royalty --Everything from France at Big Banquet

London, June 26.—President Poincare of France to-day went by special train to Windsor and deposited wreaths on the tombs of the late Queen Victoria and the late King Edward VII.

He then inspected Windsor Castle, and returned to London in Time to attend a gala matinee at the International Horse Show at Olympia with King George and Queen Mary.

To-night will end the formalities of the President's visit with a dinner given by Sir Edward Grey at the Foreign Office and a State ball by the King and Queen at Buckingham palace. President Poincare will depart for Paris at 10 a.m. to-morrow.

United States Ambassador Page had a seat at the table where King George and President Poincare sat at dinner which the visiting executive gave last night at the French Embassy. The viands, plate, wines, and chefs were from Paris.

Palmer, D.D., Winona Lake, Ind.; Rev. A. J. W. Myers, Ph.D., Rev. P. K. Dayfoot, M.A., Rev. F. L. Farewell, B.A., Miss Bertha Haine, Preston G. Orwig, of Toronto. One of the special features of this year will be the attention given to organized recreation, under the management of the School. Another feature which prevents the criticism of "all work and no play" is the reception given on Saturday evening, July 19th, to the students of the School by the members of the Faculty. On Sunday, the 20th, will be demonstrated a Combination Service of Sunday School and Church, at 10.30 in the morning. Details are in the hands of Mr. Preston G. Orwig, of the Ontario Sunday School Association Office, Toronto.

PIUS PLANS TO PROCLAIM A NEW DOGMA

Holds That Body of Virgin Mary Was Assumed Into Heaven

Milan, June 26. — The very well-informed Vatican correspondent of the "Corriere della Sera" makes an announcement which is bound to arouse intense interest in the religious world He states that during the last few days it has been stated in a limited circle of high eclesiastical dignitaries and prelates that Pius X. has expressed his intention of shortly carrying out an act of exceptional importance. His Holiness, in short, has said that he does not wish to close his Pontificate without proclaiming Heaven as a dogma.

It is a very old belief, general and deeply-rooted among Catholics, that after death the body of the Virgin Mary did not remain on earth in the tomb in which it was deposited by St. John and the other disciples, but was assumed into heaven. This belief has inspired poets and painters of all times and countries, but apparently those hitherto a Catholic who did not regard the tradition as true has been regarded as daring, though not as a heretic.

By proclaiming the tradition as a dogma, the Pope would give it the full sanction of the church, and impose it upon the faithful as one of the fundamental Catholic truths. In making such a proclamation the Pope would be exercising the highest function of the Supreme Pontiff, and exercising his infallibility. The last dogmas to be proclaimed were the Immaculate Conception in 1854 by Pius IX. and the infallibility of the Pope by the same Pontiff in 1870. No dogmas were proclaimed by Leo XIII.

LAXATIVE PILLS KILL BABY WHILST CHILDS MOTHER AWAY

Mother Thought the Bottle Containing Them Was Securely Corked

Toronto, June 26.—Going out into the garden to hang out her washing, Mrs. Marcel Gagnon, 322 Pape avenue, gave a bottle of pills to a little ten-months' old baby to play with. The bottle was half full of chocolate coated laxative tablets and Mrs. Gagnon thought it was securely corked. Rattling its new toy, however, Cecile managed to shake out the cork and attracted by the sweet-tasting tablets consumed several of them. When Mrs. Gagnon returned to the room the baby was in convulsions brought on by the strychnine in the tablets; each of them contained one-sixtieth of a grain of the poison and would be harmless for an adult.

Snatching up the baby, Mrs. Gagnon rushed into a neighbour's house and the neighbour carried the child up the street to the office of Dr. Bateman, where an emetic was administered. The baby was then hurried to the General Hospital in Dr. Bateman's auto, but died fifteen minutes after its admission in spite of all that could be done to save her.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Unsettled and a little cooler.

DYING WOMAN WANTS TO KILL HUSBAND

Atlanta, Ga., June.—Relatives of Mrs. Barbara Dodd, a wealthy Atlanta woman, who died recently leaving $100,000 to Mercer University and other large sums to charity, will attempt to prove in the superior court that they were cut off by Mrs. Dodd because certain of them had refused a proposition to kill or maim Dr. J. H. Garner, Mrs. Dodd's divorced husband.

Three charges are made in an appeal from the ruling of the Fulton county ordinary who recently upheld the will.

Mrs. Dodd was the widow of Philip Dodd, a merchant of Atlanta. Following his death she married Dr. Garner, from whom she was divorced after he had filed a petition in North Dakota. Mrs. Dodd's bequest to Mercer University, the will stipulates is to be used to create a memorial to the late Philip Dodd. The heirs are left comparatively small sums, the largest sum being $5000 for a qlind brother.

In gaining the right to recovery the case to the superior court, Mrs. Dodd's relatives attacking the will charge that she attempted to get certain of them to kill Dr. Garner or to injure him by throwing oil or vitriol in his face.

At a special meeting of the City Fathers last night, Engineer Jeffery, of the Hydro-Electric Commission, presented a detailed proposition for the acquisition of the Peterborough Light and Power Company-a distributing plant for Hydro-Electric purposes. The deliberations of the City Fathers resulted in the following resolution being passed.

Langford,—That the Peterborough Light & Power Co. be informed that this Council is willing to pay the company ninety thousand dollars ($90,000) for all the property of the company, in the city or outside of it, used in its business of supplying light, heat and power, and in addition such sum as may be fixed by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario for the expense the company has incurred in soliciting and procuring existing contracts for a supply of electric power or energy to any person by the company.—Carried.

JEWISH STAGE WEDDING

Toronto, June 26.—Mr. Samuel Aumbach, and Miss Sadie Schoengold hold by the former intentions of getting married on the stage of the Lyric Theatre. The couple hail from New Yorki and expect a host of friends and relatives to witness the ceremony.

The marriage will take place at 11.30 Saturday evening after the performance.

Mr. Aumbach has been managing the Lyric since fall, and Miss Schoengold has been employed there as an actress. The prospective bridegroom gave out some [illegible] about his marriage to-day. He was exceedingly wroth over some objections in yesterday's paper.

"Our marriage will conform to every Jewish custom, and will take place in ordinary street clothes. The bride has gone to Buffalo to round up her relatives. We'll get an official to perform the ceremony all right."

Rabbi Jacobs was visited by the prospective bridegroom, but stated after that his opinions already expressed had not altered in the least.

COST OF SILK STRIKE $3,500,000 TO DATE

Paterson, N.J., June 26.—The silk strike centred in Paterson and spread over Passaic and Hudson counties has cost the people of the state to date about $3,500,000, according to figures compiled by the state bureau of statistics of labor and industry and made public to-day.

This amount includes the loss in wages, maintenance of families of indigent workers, extra precautions against destructionof property and preservation of ordet. It does not include the losses caused by cessation of production in 200 mills, some of which have been closed nearly four months.

Open air mass-meetings were resumed here last night with leaders of the Industrial Workers of the World as speakers. William D. Haywood and Patrick Quinlan at the same gathering of strikers declared unfounded recent reports of a break between them

SUSPENDS GIRL BY NECK

Augusta Ga., June 26—Charges that he fastened a chain around the neck of his fifteen year old daughter, suspendedher from a meat hook in his butcher shop and then beat her with the but end of a whip until the blood flowed from her wounds, were made against J. J. Johnson in the recorders Court today.

Policeman R. M. Moore, who arrested Johnson, was called by neighbors, who heard the girls screams. She was exhausted when the policeman rescued her.

Why Surgeon Would Remove "Useless" Affair Just on Principle

London, Ont., June 26.—A symposium on "Diseases of the stomach, medical and surgical aspects," introduced by Dr. Alexander McPhedran, of Toronto, occupied the attention of the Canadian Medical Association for the whole of the morning session to-day. It was a meeting of the combined sections; many important points in relation to stomach diseases were brought out by the various speakers.

The convention will conclude Friday afternoon. This evening after an address on "Public Health" by Dr. Helen MacMurchy, of Toronto, the visiting doctors will be entertained at a smoker by the local members of the profession.

Dr. McPhedran termed the present age a surgical one, in the treatment of stomach diseases. But recent advances in abdominal treatment had been greater in physiology than in surgery.

"Of all the organs in the body," said the doctor, "the stomach has the widest associations."

"I think that in a good many cases where a surgeon opens the stomach and looks at the appendix he finds it quite healthful. Of course though he removes the appendix—on principle. Sometimes the patient feels much better," added the doctor, but told of one patient who, after the removal of her appendix, was quite as bad as everin a few weeks.

"Perhaps the surgeons will tell us how often this happens," he said.

"There are a great many more operaters than surgeons. There are a great many more physicians than there are qualified physicians.

"Physicians make an abundance of mistakes."

COUNTER PROPOSITION RE PROPOSED STORE IN THE WEST END

Mr. R. C. Braund is Willing to Sell the Property at What He Paid for it, or Face Store on St. Joseph Street

The City Fathers met in special session last night, his worship Mayor Bradburn presiding. Aldermen Anderson, Langford, Johnston, Green, Gillespie, Duffus and Buller were also in attendance.

Half a dozen west end citizens were present in opposition to R. C. Braund's proposition to erect a store at the east corner of Charlotte and St. Joseph street.

Mr. Braund made a counter proposal to front the store on St. Joseph street, to project no further out toward Charlotte than the edge of the dwelling house' main verandah; were this proposition accepted he would be willing that a commercial restriction by-law for that district be passed, and he would sign an agreement not to enlarge the store at any time beyond the line of the present verandah. Again, if anyone would buy the property at what he paid for it—$2,800—he would withhraw from the field altogether. When purchasing the property, he took no particular care to ascertain that there were no building restrictions.

Mr. C. S. Hetherington was not prepared to say how other residents would look at Mr. Braund's counter proposition.

To the few interested citizens present, Mr. Braund said he would give them time to raise the cash with which to buy the property in question or secure a purchaser for it. This would permit of a progibitive by-law being passed for the area named at the Board of Works' meeting Wednesday night, restricting that district to residential buildings, and letting Mr. Braund out.

His worship offered that Mr. Braund's proposition was a fair one.

Mr. Braund here stated that were the dwelling purchased from him and a prohibitive by-law not passed by Council, he would then take the building off the purchaser's hands.

The whole question was here laid over till Monday night week, to permit of opportunity to negotiate the purchase of the dwelling from Mr. Braund.

To Pave Hunter Street.

Council passed the Board of Works' recommendation that Hunter street from Water to Aylmer streets, be paved without any further "hot air" delay.

5 DAYS MURDER PENALTY

Doctor's Wife Killed Barber, Who "Wrecked Life."

Nashville, June 26—Five days in jail for involuntary manslaughter was the sentence passed on Mrs. Anna Dotson wife of Dr. Walter Dotson, a Gallatin physician, here today. She was charged with the murder of Charles Cobb, a barber, whom she shot down in a barber shop here last March.

On the stand Mrs. Dotson admitted she had had improper relations with Cobb, had told her husband and a minister, and said she had vowed if she were not separated from Dr. Dotson and could obtain devine forgiveness, she would kill the man who wrecked her life. The defence also offered testimony to support the insanity theory.

PETES DEFEATED GUELPH AFTER HARD FOUGHT GAME

Yesterday, the Petes trimmed the Sook nine at Riverside Park by the score of 9—7. The game was not of a fast order, but the boys worked hard all the time. Big Rube Schuyler opened the twirling for Guelph, while Dunn held him up, but this was Rube's day off, and anyway he was better satisfied on the bench than in the play. The heat was terrible, and big beads of prespiration icould be seen on the faces of the players. Rube was derricked in the fourth, being replaced by Doc. Burton.

Cresswell, also in the fourth was replaced by Belting, for the Petes, both working hard and putting up a good class of ball.

The Petes opened the scoring in the first innings, by tallying one run, and in the second the boys connected with Rube for only seven runs. In the fourth innings Guelph went out after some runs and managed to get three, and again in the sixth innings got four more, and it looked as though the Cook expedition would reach the head of the pole, but the Petes held them down and they did not score again.

The nearest approach to a home run this season was managed by Hilliard yesterday, who planted the ball right over the brewery sheds, but it was just inside the foul line, and the fans were very much disappointed. Trout also came in for the hitting. During the progress of the game Swartz was hit on the arm by a pitched ball and put out of the game. Dunn the visiting catcher, told the Umps in a quiet manner that he had made a mistake in calling him out at second base, and the Umps benched him for his kindly words.

FANS TAKE NOTICE!

We have been requested to state, that the management of affairs at Riverside Park will not, in future, will not tolerate abusive and insulting language to the players or Umpire, by the fans. Any person heard using such language will be put out of the Park. The management appreciate the patronage of the fans, but good sportsmanship does not mean the use of such abusive language, it only tends to degrade instead of uplifting the game.

It might be mentioned, here, that Umpire Daly yesterday, was requested by the management to announce to those present, that there would be a double-header at the Park to-day, but Umpire Daly was howled down by a number of fans in the 10 cent stand, and the announcement was not made until sometime afterwards, and then only to the main stand. The language used to both Umpire and players yesterday was of a low character and very unsportsmanlike. The management wish it understood that they will not tolerate such abusive language hereafter.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 326 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

THEIR NEW DOCTOR

Excitement in Mayville When Old Physician Is Supplanted by Young Man.

By MILDRED CAROLINE GOODRIDGE.

There was great excitement in the social circles of Mayville when the successor to the practice of old Dr. Cyrus Dall arrived. For forty years the latter had been the chosen physician of the town. When he had sold his practice to Dr. Brian Eversley, a young, handsome and wealthy member of the profession, all Mayville was agog, and speculation and gossip held the various social coteries in a kind of pleasant thrall.

The young doctor had purchased The Oaks, a beautiful estate near the edge of the village. A maiden sister was to be his housekeeper. When a new automobile and some wonderful house furnishings arrived, Miss Cyrille Rushton, aged thirty, but passing for twenty-two, as the real leader of the real social set of Mayville, was said to brighten up at a chance to once more angle for a husband. When it was further announced that the young physician was philanthropically inclined, Miss Breda Dorman, president of the Ladies' Aid society, was in transports of anticipation and delight.

The young doctor arrived, and he was not a disappointment. He was something more than handsome—earnest, affable and intellectual. He was pleased at the gracious attentions of Miss Rushton, and it seemed to interest him to listen to the ceaseless chatter of Miss Dorman. High society shrugged its shoulders at his "free dispensary" ideas for the benefit of the poorer classes living over on the flats. Still, an exhibition of his skill in their own service caused him to be received as a fit successor to the old practitioner, Doctor Dall.

The Ladies' Aid society held weekly meetings in an old store, which had been neatly fitted up for them. A Mrs. Fulton lived in apartments behind, and kept watch and ward over the place. Miss Rushton had recently joined the circle, and Miss Dorman had never been so active in her supervisory duties. The society clothed the ragged, fed the poor and had done some free nursing—Miss Dorman, very little, however. She acted as the ornament of the group. As to the haughty Miss Rushton, all she pretended to do was to donate the raw material for the really industrious ones of the club to sew into garments.

One of these latter was Nettie Lane, who sat in a corner of the room now, engrossed in the task of making four tiny night robes. The rest of the group were chattering and gossiping. Whenever Doctor Eversley's name was mentioned, Nettie's eyes brightened with interest. It was mentioned very frequently.

"The way Cyrille Rushton has set her cap for the doctor is simply brazen," observed Sarah Bates, who had graduated into old maidenhood several years ago.

"Not half as bold as Breda's sly puss way," broke in cynical, wasp-armed Selina Marton. "She pretended to have neuralgia, just to get the doctor's attention."

Plain, quiet Nettie smiled to herself. She was happy in knowing that the doctor had made quite a friend and confidant of her. Miss Eversley had taken a decided fancy to her. Nettie was, in fact, very close to the doctor; something in their natures harmonized. Miss Eversley had seen through the feigned illness of several young ladies who had called for her brother's professional care. She had laughed over these plausible subterfuges with Nettie.

If anybody had told Nettie that these ripening friendships indicated a chance to capture the handsome young physician, she would have been overwhelmed with confusion. Such an idea had never entered her sensible little head. For all that, she knew she had never met a man whose kindly, human spirit had so awakened respect and admiration in her pure, gentle soul.

"And what do you say of all this babble, our little busy Dorcas," challenged Miss Bates, noticing the unobtrusive Nettie.

"I only know that Doctor Eversley is a very splendid man," replied Nettie softly. "Why, I am making these little trifles for a child who belongs to a family that the doctor has practically taken charge of at his own expense. He is a good, good man."

Nettie grew so enthusiastic that she flushed consciously. Miss Bates gave gave her a keen look and whispered to Miss Morton.

"It can't be possible that little nobody has ideas—"

"About the doctor," said Miss Merton. "Oh, ridiculous."

Nettie finished her work somewhat later and went home. Miss Rushton came in, then the lady president, and then a messenger arrived. He brought a note from Doctor Eversley. It was addressed to the society. A contagious sickness had broken out in a poor family without means or friends. Could the society appoint some one to give half a day for a week to day nursing for two little children in the family?

There was dead silence at the word "contagious." Miss Rushton had an urgent engagement. Miss Dorman talked of "volunteers." The group gradually broke up and the doctor's note received no reply.

That afternoon Doctor Eversley's automobile stopped in front of the poor home where his services were so sorely needed. He was a trifle disappointed at receiving no recognition of his message, and had decided to enlist the sympathies of his sister. His knock brought a neat figure wearing nurse cap and apron to the door.

"Miss Lane!" he exclaimed in wonderment.

"Yes, it is I," Nettie smiled back. "A neighbor told me of this case, and I have so wished to see if I have the patience and skill to act the nurse."

"You are an angel," said Doctor Eversley with heightened color as he entered the sick room.

Never had a poor family such royal donations as those received by the one now under the care of Doctor Eversley as physician and Nettie Lane as nurse. Miss Rushton sent delicacies from her table every morning. The Ladies' Aid society invested all its surplus funds in sheets, pillow cases, comforters, an invalid chair and clothing.

That dread word "contagious" made greetings on the street quite few and far between for the doctor. His sister, however, was visited daily by the anxious young ladies, hoping the dear doctor was not overworking himself, that the dreadful disease would not spread, and eager to learn the real sentiments of the Eversleys as to "poor Miss Lane, who was just cut out for a nurse."

When the truth got out that the contagious feature of the case did not extend beyond light measles, Miss Rushton bit her lip and Miss Dorman denounced Nettie as a schemer.

"This is one of the great pleasures of a physician's life," said Doctor Eversley, as he and Nettie walked away from the home where they had taken the part of true ministering angels.

Nettie fully understood him. They had found the poor home filled with squalor, illness and suffering. They had left it supplied with the comforts of life and the inmates happy and hopeful.

There came a day when Miss Rushton took a sudden journey to relatives, and Miss Dorman resigned from the Ladies' Aid society. Two lines in the weekly announced an important engagement.

"You see, my brother is a very practical young man," was the way Miss Eversley explained the situation. "He thinks, as I do, that a good nurse makes a good doctor's wife."

MANY PRINCES IN FIELD

Balkan Royal Personages Take More Chances Than Others

The number of princes of Royal blood who took to the field at the outbreak of the Turko-Balkan war constitutes a record in modern history. It is quite in keeping with the mediaevalism which still lingers in the Balkans that this should be the case.

Modern practice is against the presence of kings with their troops in war; too much depends on the chance bullet. In the Russo-Japanese conflict the Russian grand ducal personages engaged took a very minor part in the war.

England gave a prince of the blood to the South African War and a soldier's grave. The Duke of Connaught was in the Egyptian War and the late Duke of Cambridge did doughty deeds at Inkerman. But the tragedy of the prince imperial proved a deterrent to royal adventures of this kind. Governments shun such risks.

CANADA'S FIRST STATE PRISONER.

When the gun boomed from Nepean Point signifying that Parliament was prorogued, it released from custody in the Carleton County jail Mr. R. C. Miller, Canada's first state prisoner, who, since February 21st, has been incarcerated in the county jail by order of Speaker Sproule, of the Canadian House of Commons. It will be remembered that Mr. Miller was asked to testify before the Public Accounts Committee as to how he had spent $41,000 belonging to the Diamond Light and Heating Company, which had secured a contract from the Dominion Government. When Mr. Miller refused to answer the committee's questions, he was brought to the bar of the House and when he again refused Parliament was in a quandry. Following the British precedent he should have been sent to the Tower but as Canada has no Tower, he was sent to Carleton County jail, and there he has remained ever since. Of course, when Parliament reassembles he may again be asked to speak, and on refusal again be committed to jail; but there is no likelihood of this occuring. In the conflict with Parliament Mr. Miller has evidently won, and hereafter any man who in a similar position may choose to remain silent, may be encouraged by Mt. Miller's experience. At the worst a refusal to talk will only mean a srtrt termi jn jail. Evidently even the Canadian Parliament cannot make a man talk if he doesn't want to.

THE SESSIONAL INDEMNITY.

As happened last year, the newspapers have been publishing stories of a "raid" being intended upon the Treasury by members demanding an increase in the indemnity. Needless to say, the Session closed without any such "raid" being made. The story of a round robin being in circulation was not true—at any rate, no Conservative member saw or signed such document. At every session recently the subject has been discussed informally among members on both sides of the House, and there is practically unanimity among them that the present is inadequate for members of the Commons. This is particularly true of the far eastern and western men, who simply have to let their private business go by default as soon as they come to Ottawa. There are men whose telegraph tolls alone amount to $50.00 a mouth, largely in attending to public business connected with their constituencies. Moreover, the demands made for subscription to this and that in their constituencies are a heavy drain upon their resources. Churches, societies, clubs, charities, everything of this nature ,ook upon the member as being the proper man to head the list of contributors. The Government has, so far, declined to accede to the request of members who believe the indemnity should be increased, although they all agree that it is too small for the sacrifices made.

Sergeant-Major Under General French

Veteran of Boer War Who Lost Health on the Veldt Tells Experience.

Good Advice for All who Have Indigestion or Stomach Disorders

In his home at Waldegrove, N. S., no one is better known than Sergt.-Major Cross, late of the 4th Queen's Own Hussars. Speaking of the ill-effects of a campaign upon a man's constitution, the Sergt.-Major writes: "I served under General French during the late Boer war, in the capacity of Sergt.-Major. It was perhaps owing to a continued diet of bully beef, hard tack, and bad water, but at any rate my stomach entirely gave out. I was in such a state that I could eat nothing without the greatest suffering. The army doctors did not help me much, and since leaving the service I have been very miserable. Some few months ago a friend told me he had been a great sufferer from indigestion until he tried Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they cured him. I confess it was without much faith I bought a box, but the first dose made me feel better than I had been for a long time. Dr. Hamilton's Pills completely cured, and now I can eat everything and anything. I have recommended them to others and in every case the result has been similar to mine."

Quick, sure results attend the use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They cure disorders of the stomach, correct indigestion, make you feel uplifted and strengthened. To renew or maintain health, Dr. Hamilton's Pills always prove a good prescription. 25c. per box, five boxes for $1.00, all dealers, or the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.

INSPIRED THE BOYS

Chaucer Elliott Was a First Class All-round Sport

Chaucer Elliott, all-round sport than whom in his day no Canadian had a better athletic record held his friends by his magnetic personal qualities. At any line of sports he was equally at home, though baseball, rugby, and hockey appealed to him most of all. He was perfectly at home in any company. He had a fund of good stories, and his experiences were always interesting, especially as he had the happy faculty of invariably seeing the humorous side of things. He was of a happy-go-lucky, roving disposition, and wandered around a great deal in his lifetime. The great secret of his success in coaching was not so much what he taught the players, but the inspiration he gave them to do their very best all the time. As a referee he enjoyed the complete confidence of the players, and as a consequence he was always in great demand. The harder the task the better he liked it, and no gamer man ever stood in shoe leather.

WHY WOMEN LIVE LONGER THAN MEN

Do Not Expend Their Vital Strength Unnecessarily—Their Figures Are Changing

Statistics prove that women live longer than men. From this point arises an extremely interesting physiological question—how is it to be accounted for that the sex which always has been considered physically frailer than men should in the majority of instances outlive men?

If we are to believe the latest authorities on the subject, we find that women are much more tenacious of life and resist disease much more readily than the average man. She is in many respects the superior of the two.

As a rule, she does not expend her vital strength unnecessarily, while the majority of men either in work, in play, or in pleasure are literally prodigal of their store.

One writer has turned out some instructive comparative figures with regard to the liability of men and women to disease and death. He says from 5 to 35 years of age the death rate between the sexes remains about even, but afterwards the scale turns in favor of women. At 40 a woman has seventy-eight chances to one against dying, while man has only forty-nine chances to one. At 60 the odds are nearly twice as large in favor of woman, and at 80 they are five times as great.

Prof. Sargent of Harvard says their figures are changing to resemble more the men: More height, deeper chests, smaller hips.

SHOT A MOOSE

Thrilling Experience of an Edmonton Young Woman

Feira Plymate, an athletic young woman living with her parents surprised a party of seasoned big game hunters by dropping in its tracks a big bull moose the third day out on a trip in the back country, about three miles from Twatinaw, on the Athabasca line, north of Edmonton. One shot from her 33-55 rifle did the trick. Miss Plymate was tramping through the brush four miles from camp when she heard the crackle of the underbrush as the moose came bounding through. The party had spread out to cover a wider area and there was no one within a considerable distance of her. Miss Plymate raised her rifle and took aim, hitting the moose square in the neck. The animal stumbled a few [illegible]

Silver From Sweepings

In the manufacture of silver wares the loss of silver in floor sweepings would be great were it not for the methods of recovery. The smelting of sweeps requires a special plant which but few concerns can afford to have, therefore most of them prepare this material so that it can be sold. The most satisfactory method is to grind the sweeps to a fine powder, so that a fair sample can be obtained for assay. One assay of the material may then be made by the purchaser and another by the seller. Unless the sweeps are ground very fine, however, and then mixed thoroughly, there is but little chance of agreement between the two assays, as coarse material is filled with fine shot silver, which, when samples are made, is not evenly distributed.

When the Clyde Wanted Water

In the days when the Clyde was navigable to Glasgow for only small vessels a steamer stuck in the mud near Renfrew and the skipper was not sparing in strong language. While waiting for the rising tide he saw a little girl approaching the river with a bucket to fetch some water. This was too much for the poor captain, and, leaning over the side, he thus addressed her: "If you tak' ae drap o' water oot here till I get afloat, I'll warm yer ear for't."

The man's body is embedded in the solid concrete, and is likely to stay there, as to blast it out would destroy not only the body but a great part of one of the largest blocks of cement composing the dam

Breeding Hedgehogs for Bounty

In Vermont, United States, a bounty of 20 cents is paid for every hedgehog killed. Some farmers have added considerably to their income by raising hedgehogs, and the Legislature will probably be asked to repeal the Hedgehog Bounty Bill. The bounties paid per year amount to $20,000 representing the killing of about 100,000 hedgehogs.

An old woodsman gives this method of cooking potatoes over a camp fire: Two frying pans of exactly the same size are used. First fry sliced bacon in one pan. The potatoes sliced or minced are poured over this then more strips of bacon laid on top. The other pan is used as a cover. When the potatoes have browned on one side the pans are held tightly together and turned over and the potatoes are browned on both sides.

POWER BOATS.

Block Island, June 26.—The Thistle, the scratch boat, owned by J. H. Wallace, won the Lipton Viking trophy, and Henry Soeldner's Alfred S. captured the Day cup in the New York Yacht Club's 100-mile power boat race, which started off Whortleberry Island and ended at Block Island. The Thistle's time was 11h. 31m. 45s., while the Frances H., second in the Viking contest, crossed the line a minute later in 11h. 32m. 47s. In the Day cup event the time of the Alfred S. was 14h 3 m. and the Elmo II., the next boat to finish, 16h. 52m. 46s.

TURF.

London, June 26.—C. Bower Ismay the owner of Craganour, which finished first in the Epsom Derby, but was disqualified, has withdrawn his suit by which he sought to enjoin the Jockey Club and the owners of the three placed horses from paying over or receiving the stakes.

The Birmingham Football Club have all but completed the arrangements for the transfer of Evans, the Welsh International goalkeeper of the Coventry City Club. R. Fairman, the reserve back, has also signed on for Birmingham.

Plymouth Argyle have signed on Thomas Gallogogley, an inside forward from Bedlay Juniors, a Scottish club.

Clapton Orient have signed on Pattison and outside left, from Sunderland.

Derby County have signed on the following players for next season; Scattergood, Lawrence, Atkin, Betts, Waugh, Buckley, Barbour, Bagshaw, Richards, Skelton, Bloomer, Leonard Grimes, Sharpe, Barnes, Neve, Waller, Cullen and Hardman.

Ashcroft has not signed for Raith Rovers and it is said that he contemplates taking action against Millwall Athletic for breach of contract.

New York, June 26. — Motor boat enthusiasts are laying plans for an attempt to lift the Harmsworth trophy which was won by Mackey Edward of the British fleet of challengers last year in his Maple Leaf IV. The trial races for the selection of three boats to go to England will be held in Huntington Bay, L. I., the scene of last year's races on July 7, 8 and 9. The course, however, has been changed slightly so as to assure smoother water. Prospective entrants are keeping their plans secret but it is said that more than a dozen boats, most of them new craft, will appear in the trials.

BASEBALL.

Lockport, June 16.—(Special) — Hon. George A. Brock, the minister-mayor of the city of Lockport, has informed the officers of the Mayors' conference of the state of New York that he believes the Sunday baseball question, recently considered at the state conference, should be one of local option. He favors a legislative act which will give to the localities the right to vote on the question.

He stated yesterday that no matter what his opinions as a minister or mayor may be, he believes that this is the proper solution of the question and he is especially strong in that conviction since hearing other mayors talk on the matter at the Binghampton meeting.

Mayor Brock has officially sanctioned Sunday baseball in Lockport after the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon. He issued an edict to that effect before the season opened and incidentally displeased some church goers, who had believed that being a minister, he would enforce the law on the sport.

RING.

Gloucester, June 26. — About 400 fight fans saw one of the best lightweight battles ever waged here when Johnnie (Kid) Alberts of Elizabeth, N. J., the Canadian light-weight champion, clashed with George Alger of Cambridge, in the main bout of 12 round at the Lenox A. C. Alberts, by forcing all the fighting and with some clean hitting at opportune times, easily won the decision, which, judging from the applause, was popular with the fans.

Alger put up a great defence. The last three rounds were all Alberts', and in the 11th Alger just escaped taking the count.

In the semi-final Jimmy Sullivan of Boston knocked out Kid Regan of this city in five rounds, while in the curtain raiser Young Sullivan of Manchester and Young Morley of Roxbury mixed it for four rounds to a draw.

YACHTING.

Boston, June 26.—A speedy addition to the Buzzard's bay pleasure fleet this season will be the steam yacht Flyer, owned by Col. Joseph Fletcher of Providence, which has been chartered by Edwin S. Webster of this city through the brokerage department of Bwasey, Raymond & Page. Mr. Webster will use the harbor of Quissett for headquarters. The Flyer was originally the Niagara IV., Howard Gould owner, and till the Tarantula appeared was regarded the fastest steam yacht on the Atlantic coast. The Niagara IV. was beaten by the Tarantula, owned by W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., but in a second contest the Gould craft made easy work of the Tarantula.

TENNIS.

Wimbledon, Eng., June 26. — The match between Maurice E. McLoughlin of San Francisco and the English crack, H. Roper Barrett, who were drawn together in the first round of the English lawn tennis championship here ended in an American victory, three sets to two. The match was fiercely fought throughout and ran its whole length before the more youthful competitor was able to overcome his English rival. Excitement among the big gallery of spectators ran high from start to finish, and McLoughlin was accorded a gratifying reception when his triumph was announced.

In the first set all the games went the service until the ninth, when the American lost the service by a love game, and Barrett, playing at the top of his form, took the next game and the set at 6—4.

WOMAN'S INFERIORITY

Their Education Sacrificed in Order to Provide For Their Brothers

The strongest argument used against woman's insistence upon equality with man is her inferiority to him. The statement, no doubt, contains some truth. Considering men and women of the same sphere of life, be it high or low, we usually find men's problems far more interesting than those women folk's because intellectually men are women's superior.

To illustrate this contention we are told that while the male members of a certain family manage to attain the highest positions, acquire the greatest scholarships, or prove shining lights in one sphere or another, their sisters are apt to remain the simple, untutored and ignorant girls their foremothers were.

In this connection there is a very interesting story told of the family of the Pope. It is a well known fact that Pope Pius X. came from a very humble home, but few imagined to what extent this simplicity reached.

It was, therefore, a matter of no small surprise when His Excellency's late sister admitted her illiteracy. Who could have associated the Pope with a sister unable to decipher the alphabet? But she unhesitatingly explained: "To help Joseph to become Pope the girls had to be neglected." She then went on to tell of the poverty of their parents, and explained that if each child had received even the least attention Joseph could never have attained this exalted position.

Novel as this disclosure may sound to those living under present conditions, when at least elementary education is compulsory, it ought not to astonish the Hebrew women, whose ancestors lived under less favorable circumstances. Perhaps ninety of the one hundred girls remained thoroughly ignorant because there was a boy in the family destined to become a rabbi, for whose education all efforts were strained and all the girls were sacrificed. Poverty never interfered with helping a son acquire learning because the heir, the "kadish" must know the Torah, even if all other members of the family had to stint themselves of all necessities.

Is it, therefore, surprising that woman's intellect was stunted? Not because of her natural inability or inadequacy is woman mentally inferior to man, but rather because of her self-sacrifice has man been helped to the superiority. As a matter of fact, every woman given the opportunity to prove her ability has been able not only to hold her own, but usually manages to vie with the greatest men.

WHAT QUEENS CAN DO

Several Royal Ladies Could Earn Living If Put to It

The different talents of the royal ladies of Europe are always interesting. Queen Mary, for instance, has considerable talent for painting on china, but a French newspaper has remarked that most of the present-day queens could earn their living at a pinch.

"Carmen Sylva" is a very talented authoress, and could make an income from her literary abilities. Should this fail her, she might live by secretarial work, for she knows several languages, writes shorthand, and is an expert typist.

The queen of the Belgians took a medical degree at Leipsig, and before she was married she used to help Duke Theodore of Bavaria in his practice as an oculist. She is also a skilful motor car driver, and is an able mechanic.

The queen of Norway is a genius at hat trimming, and could easily compete with any high-class milliner. She is very clever at bookbinding, and her versatility extends to painting which she does uncommonly well.

The German empress and Queen Wilhelmina of Holland are not really so accomplished, but both are fairly good at miniature painting.

IS IT WORTH WHILE?

A few things for which the modern girl is criticised:

For being intellectual.
For being silly.
For getting off a car backward.
For taking an interest in athletics.
For being a little bit "fast."
For being a prude.
For not marrying.
For being anxious to marry.
For being frivolous.
For taking herself too seriously.
For neglecting the baby.
For being a parasite.
For thrusting herself into men's occupations.
For wanting to vote.
For taking no interest in civic matters.

Is it really worth while being a girl?

BLIND BUT HAPPY WROTE MANY HYMNS

Fanny Crosby, Author of Best Known Sacred Songs in English Language

The name of Fanny Crosby is known wherever hymns are sung, for she has written upwards of eight thousand of them. On her ninety-third birthday this little blind songstress, diminutive as a child of twelve and tremulous under the weight of her great age granted an interview to a woman reporter at her home in Bridgeport Conn.

"All my life I have had so much!" she said. "After four score years and ten I know wretchedness only by hearsay; but, oh, I hope I have comforted some who were heavily burdened. That hope spurred me to the writing of the hymns. But I have written so very many that it is impossible to remember most of them. For this reason I have often made laughable mistakes. One morning at Northfield the audience sang, 'Hide Me, O My Saviour, Hide,' and I was so much pleased with it that, turning to Mr Sankey, I asked 'where did you get that song?'

"'Really,' he replied, 'you ought to know, for you are the guilty author.'

"Generally when the melody is given I choose my own subject for a hymn-poem.

"My mother's death in 1890 suggested:

"'Over the River they call me.
Friends that are dear to my heart
Soon I shall meet them in glory,
Never, no never, to part.'

"Again, the story of a Boston harbor pilot's dying word proved an inspiration. 'I see the light,' he said to those who watched beside him, and, hearing that last word, I wrote:

"'I see the Light, 'tis coming.
It breaks upon my soul;
It streams above the tempest
And ocean waves that roll.'

"That many of my hymns have been dictated by the Holy Spirit I have no doubt. Sometimes it seemed that there was a deep, clear well of inspiration from which I was free to draw. At other times the burden of inspiration was almost too heavy.

FANNY CROSBY

The blind hymn writer

"Most of my verses are written in the night. Sometimes a hymn comes to me by stanzas, and needs only to be written down, but I never have any part of a poem committed to paper until the whole is composed.

"The hymn, 'O Child of God, Wait Patiently,' came into being at Northfield. Mr. Sankey played a pretty air and asked me to write a poem, but my mind seemed a blank. Next morning just when we were all going for a drive, I asked to be excused and in a few moments the words of the hymn came in regular order just as they now stand:

"'O Child of God, wait patiently
When dark thy path may be
And let thy faith lean trustingly
On Him who cares for thee.'

"The best of my poems, the ones that are my favorites, came as a complete whole, needing no revision. In April, 1868, and old and dear friend, when bidding me good-bye, said, 'I have just forty minutes before my train leaves for Cincinnati. Here is a melody. Can you write words for it?' For twenty minutes I was wholly unconscious of all else except the work I was doing. At the end of that time I recited the words to 'Safe in the Arms of Jesus.'"

FOR THE THIN WOMAN

Diet and Daily Habits Must be Carefully Looked After

The proper food for the thin woman must be considered. Where good milk can be had there can be nothing better to make flesh. Starchy foods, like macaroni, potatoes and the like, are important flesh builders. Well cooked rice sweetened and eaten with cream is easy of digestion and very nourishing. Baked potatoes with lots of butter should be on the list daily for the thin woman. Butter is nutritious fattening and usually liked. Pickles are not good.

For breakfast, fresh fruit, like peaches, melons, pears, grapes and bananas, when the latter agree. Somtimes this food is found hard to assimilate, and it is in the assimilation of food that flesh is gained.

Pork, lamb or rare beef, breakfast bacon, well baked biscuit, milk or cream toast, eggs poached or soft boiled, potatoes baked or mashed, but not fried; a cup of coffee, with or without cream, but with sugar; very little tea—this should be a palatable meal, and food does no good if not agreeable to the taste; no longer than five hours between meals, and a glass of milk taken between; whatever is liked for luncheon and dinner, with such desserts as custards, tapioca, sago; no thin soups, but purees of onions, potatoes, rice and the like.

The daily bath and plenty of sleep are helps in gaining flesh. If it taxes the strength too much to take the bath before breakfast try the afternoon, long enough before the evening meal to permit of the hour's rest in kimono and without corset. The water should be as liked. Tepid is best, never very hot, as it will weaken, and the cold spray must finish if freedom from colds is to be maintained. Of course the room should be warm, and chilling must be avoided.

HOW TO FIGHT CONSUMPTION

The Grand Duchess of Hesse has hit upon a novel scheme for propagating the knowledge of how to fight consumption. On her recent visit to a hygiene exhibition at Darmstadt she saw some match boxes with printed instructions on the reverse side what to do and what not to do in order to avoid the spread of tubercular contagion. The boxes were samples. Several billion had been made to the order of some South American government. The Grand Duchess has now succeeded in inducing all the match manufacturers of the Grand Duchy to place these instructions on the back of every box they sell, the price to remain the same.

The Face Value of Smiles

In bad weather, in good weather, in summer or in winter, at work or at play, perhaps there is nothing of greater value than a smile.

"She always has a smile for us," is constantly heard. Also: "Her smile lights the room and makes us all feel cheerful," is frequently said. Furthermore, it is well known that no disease is quite so catching as the happiness created by the man or woman or child who greets us with a smile.

Not only do our smiles cheer others, but if we are sad and try to shape our faces into a smile we begin to feel better and happier immediately. This is a fact—and a valuable fact, too. Let us try the experiment, then, of smiling when we don't feel like it, and see what a difference it will make.

The so-called "Smile that won't come off" may be tiresome sometimes, but at the risk of being tiresome it is well worth while to diffuse about one's self an atmosphere of good will —much better than wearing the frown that won't come off, warranted to make for general unhappiness and a loss of friends.

Russians Use Wooden Spoons

The peasant class in Russia, which forms 77 per cent. of the total population, still uses the wooden spoon. The people of this class can not afford plated ware. The middle classes use steel and plated ware, and the wealthy classes usually have sterling. Most of the steel and plated ware is manufactured in Warsaw. Probably 90 per cent. of the people of Russia use the very cheapest grades of table ware and only 10 per cent. of silver ware.

Wagner's Thirteen's

It is a comfort to know that thirteen is not invariably connected with bad luck. Richard Wagner revelled in the figure; he was born in '13, and the sum of the figures of the year also made 13; his name had 13 letters; he composed and published 13 great works, and his real career commenced on the 13th day of the month. "Tannhauser" was completed on April 13, and produced in Paris for the first time on March 13. Wagner left Bayreuth on September 13; he also happened to leave this world on the 13th day of the month.

Natural Blankets

Nature is kind in Ecuador. When a native wants a blanket he goes to a demajagua tree and cuts from it a strip of peculiarly soft, thick bark, five or six feet long. This is dampened and beaten until the flexibility of the sheet is much increased. The rough, gray exterior is next peeled off, and the sheet dried in the sun. The result is a blanket, soft, light, and fairly warm, of an attractive cream color. It may be rolled into a compact bundle without hurt, and with ordinary usage will last for several years.

The Cork papers published reports of a very remarkable incident. When some workers were cutting down a tree beside a "blessed well" near Mallow an extraordinary manifestation, the reports state, was made. A worker tried forcibly to break away the trunk, which had been sawn halfway through, when the tree, from the incision upwards, split in two, one half falling away, and the other for a considerable height upwards, remaining erect, and revealing prominently on the centre a well-defined crucifix. Further down, was a smaller and also quite distinct crucifix. Old people say that the well close by the tree was the scene of many cures, notably of eye ailments.

PEASANT LIFE IN BULGARIA

Deadly Monotonous as a Rule But the Country is Beautiful and Full of Interest

The little kingdom of Bulgaria is aptly described by Felix J. Koch as a land of pictures and politics. Politics is the bane of Bulgaria. More important to even the simplest peasant than his business or his home life is his politics.

Bulgarians generally are either shop-keepers, shepherds or farmers. The farmers (peasants) are the great majority, and they do not live out on their farms, but in villages, whence each morning young and old go forth behind the sluggish Cape buffalo to till and harvest.

The Bulgar is not intemperate in anything except tobacco, and that he must and will have at all times. Bulgaria exports tobacco to all the world, and so the crop must needs be large. When the leaves are full grown they are gathered and strung on long cords drawn through the stems, and these ropes of leaves are then set against the house walls to brown in the sun, thus giving the needed contrast to the pinks and yellows of the houses.

The other great essentials of life in Bulgaria are the peppers and mangoes, used for making the famous guylas, dear to these folk as it is to the Hungarians. The peppers too are strung on long strings to ripen, and these too are hung against the house walls, giving to the village streets a radiance that is almost fiery.

Peasant's Domestic Life

The homes in Bulgaria too are curious notably those at Tirnova, the one time capital of the old Bulgar Empire. There the lower floor consists either of rooms devoted to basement purposes, or among the poorer artisans, is utilized as a stable. Stairs ascend from it to the second story, but they are used only in getting things from or carrying them down the cellar. The usual entrance to a Bulgar dwelling, or dwelling floor, is by an outer stairway. There all is simplicity. The homes are intended, it would seem, for use only by night. The farmer retires early. A simple oil lamp is kept burning before the ikon, or sacred picture, but oil is not to be wasted by late hours. Besides, one is tired after the day's work in the fields and wants to go to bed for early rising. A paper is brought down from Sofia, is read aloud at times by one of the family and then ensues the eternal political discussion.

The houses are of adobe, with heavy projecting beams. Upper stories project, and where they fail to meet above the street they are joined by grapevine trellises, from which heavy bunches of fruit suspend, so that one may pick and eat as he rides through the street on his mule. Down the centre of this street a brook will run and in this cattle and swine crowd so close that at times it is difficult to force a passage-way.

Doctors and Priests

Life has but few variations with this peasantry. When sick the farmer sends for the Government's travelling doctor, who prescribes, partly at the cost of the patient and partly at the expense of the State. If the trouble does not seem to warrant a physician's attendance some old woman suggests remedies, often peppermint oil or a harmless powder.

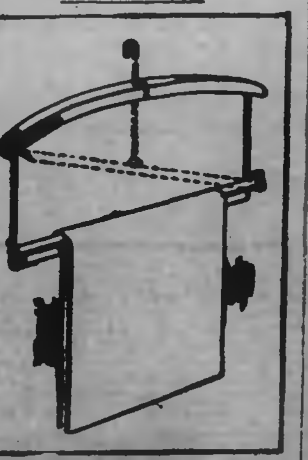
AIRSHIPS FROM FRANCE

British Admiralty Places Order for Huge Dirigible Balloon

The British Admiralty ordered from the French Astra Company of Paris a dirigible of great size, of a type designed by Senor Leonardo Torres Quevedo, the Spanish engineer.

The authorities believe that the construction of small military dirigibles is a great mistake. The Germans realised that long ago, and their airships are already of very large dimensions, while their fresh orders are for still larger dirigibles. The French authorities have adopted the same point of view.

These new dirigibles are to have on the upper surface of their envelope, and towards their centre, a platform on which will be mounted a machine gun. This is intended to be a powerful weapon in dealing with aeroplanes and other dirigibles, and thus will be dispelled two of the greatest objections to the use of dirigibles in war, namely, that they cannot see above them, and that they are defenceless against attack from an aeroplane.



GARMENTS CAN'T SLIP OFF.

ment under it, or lap it over. Then drop the bar into place again and lock it. In this way the garment is kept from slipping off the hanger, as sometimes happens, and does not wrinkle in the least. After the skirt or trousers have been adjusted, and more than one can be placed on the same hanger, the coat can be slipped over it.

THE TRAINING OF A FLEA

The Nimble Little Fellows Are Strong And Intelligent, And May be Taught Many Tricks

There is something irresistibly comic in the idea that a flea can perform any other antics save biting and jumping. And yet it is a scientific fact that the flea is mightier than the horse, proportionately, while many years' study of his psychology has convinced men that his brain is a keen as that of a monkey.

The harnessing of the embryo performer is an exceedingly delicate operation. He has to be bound round his waist with very fine gold wire, and as the chain has to be tight enough to prevent his escape and yet sufficiently slack to allow him to indulge in his deep breathing exercises, the difficutly will be appreciated.

The first step in the training proper is to eradicate the jumping habit, and to give instruction in walking. This is done by guiding him over a sheet of white paper. Plan out the route, and insist upon his traversing it with dignity. The instant he jumps, give a savage jerk to his chain, and compel him to commence again from the starting-point.

It takes, as a rule, several days before the instinct to jump is completely conquered, but the time varies considerably.

A flea trainer relating his experiences said:

The flea is not a Marathon runner, and his pace must be accelerated before he can appear with distinction before the public. I make him walk across a plate held over a small gas-stove. As the heat grows more intense he starts hustling to get off. I allow him no short cuts, however, but insist on the straight road, which he takes at top-speed. If any sluggishness is subsequently shown, the hot plate will always effect a cure.

The theatre proper for displaying the dusky lilliputians consists simply of a small table with white painted top, but the "props" and accessories are genuine little models, perfect examples of craftsmanship in miniature construction. My fleas drive motors, fire off cannons, set windmills in motion, draw water, ring bells, etc.

To be perfectly truthful, I must admit that most of the tricks are done merely by the fleas walking, and by taking advantage of their great strength; but, of course, during my lectures I am inclined somewhat to overstate their mental attributes.

I feed my animals every night after the final performance by placing them all on my bare arm. When they have had sufficient nourishment, they fall off, contented and tired, leaving tiny punctures where they have dined. It is strange that a free-lance flea making war upon me irritates me beyond measure, yet the evening meal of my little breadwinners causes me no inconvenience whatever. Their bed consists of a well-ventilated box padded with cotton-wool.

CANADA IS NINTH

Well up in the List of Nations as Maritime Carrier

Canada is now ninth in the tonnage list of the maritime states of the world as published in a report issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The other eight, beginning at the top, are Great Britain Germany, the United States, Norway, France, Russia, Italy and Japan.

The total number of vessels on the register books of the Dominion at the close of the last fiscal year was 8,088, measuring 770,446 tons, a marked increase over the total for the previous year. The number of steamers is given as 3,444, with a gross tonnage of 522,741. Estimating the average value to be $30 per ton, the value of the net registered tonnage at the end of the year would be $23,113,380.

New vessels added to the list during the year numbered 339, with a net register of 27,736 tons. Estimating the value of the new vessels as $45 per ton, the value of the new vessels is given at $1,148,120. During the year 279 vessels were removed from the register. Of these 37 were wrecked, 18 stranded, 12 lost, 10 abandoned at sea, 12 foundered and 31 "reported out of existence."

The department estimates that 41,447 men and boys find employment on the ships of Canada.

FIRST OF WORLD'S MOSQUES

Interesting Legends That Are Connected With Famous St. Sophia in Constantinople.

"Famed throughout the world for its beautiful architecture, the mosque of St. Sophia has a legend that acquires sudden interest now," writes a European correspondent of the Daily News. "Originally the mosque was a Christian church. The priest was in the act of celebrating mass on that memorable 29th of May, 1453, when Sultan Mohammed rode his horse into the sacred edifice, followed by his victorious Turks, and began slaughtering the Christians. The priest fled from the altar, passing through a small door behind it, but when the pursuing Turks reached the spot, intending to follow the priest, they found but a blank wall—the door had disappeared, and all traces of the fugitive were gone. But the story goes that when once again the mosque of St. Sophia becomes a Christian place of worship, the wall will open of its own accord and reveal the secret door out of which the aged priest will step forth to conclude the celebration of the mass at the altar.

"Another legend, recounted even by the Turks themselves, tells of two monumental candles built into the apse of the mosque. On every high Christian festival these candles are supernaturally set alight. When these candles are quite burnt down into their sockets the Turkish domination will be over, and the mosque of holy wisdom will be a Christian church once more.

"The Balkan allies are now wondering how far the candles have been consumed, and hoping that the present year may witness the fulfillment of this ancient prophecy."

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith detains Thorne while the prisoner is sent for. An order comes from General Varney for Wilfred to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

CHAPTER IX—The prisoner is thrust into the room alone with Thorne, who recognizes him as his elder brother, Henry Dumont. They put up a fake fight. Henry implores his brother to shoot him in the leg. Thorne refuses and Henry accidentally kills himself. Arrelsford rushes into the room with the guard. Thorne nonchalantly says: "Corporal, here is your prisoner, we had a fight and I shot him."

CHAPTER X—Caroline goes to the war department telegraph office to send a message.

CHAPTER XI—Arrelsford refuses to let Caroline's message go through. It is a telegram to Wilfred simply asking forgiveness, but Arrelsford suspects a double meaning. He and Edith secrete themselves to watch Thorne, whose arrival Arrelsford expects.

CHAPTER XII—Thorne takes charge of the telegraph office and after satisfying himself that he is alone attempts to send a message, but is interrupted by the arrival of a messenger from the secretary of war with a dispatch.

CHAPTER XIII—Arrelsford and Edith see Thorne alter the secretary's dispatch. Thorne is shot in the wrist by Arrelsford when he attempts to send it. Arrelsford calls the guard, and when they appear Thorne turns the tables by ordering the arrest of Arrelsford.

CHAPTER XIV—The removal of Arrelsford is stopped by the arrival of General Randolph. Thorne again begins sending the dispatch. Arrelsford protests, declaring Thorne is sending a forged order to weaken the lines of defense. Randolph demands upon what authority Thorne has assumed command of the telegraph office. Miss Varney appears.

The Richmond streets were filled with people, mostly invalids, non-combatants, women and children. A tremendous attack was being launched by the besiegers somewhere, it was evident. Urgent messengers from General Lee called every reserve out of the garrison at Richmond, and the quiet streets and country highways woke instantly to life. Such troops as could be spared moved to the front at the double-quick. Every car of the dilapidated railroad was pressed into service. Those who could not be transported by train went on horseback or afoot. The youngest boy and the oldest man alike shouldered their muskets, and with motley clothes, but with hearts aflame, marched to the sound of the cannon. The women, the sick, the wounded and invalid men and the children waited.

Morning would tell the tale. Into the city from which they marched men and boys would come back; an army nearly as great as had gone forth, but an army halting, maimed, helpless, wounded, suffering, shot to pieces. They had seen it too often not to be able to forecast the scene absolutely. They knew with what heroic determination their veterans, under the great Lee, were fighting back the terrific attacks of their brothers in blue, under the grimly determined Grant. They could hear his great war-hammer ringing on their anvil; a hammer of men, an anvil of men. Plan or no plan, success or no success of some secret service operations, some vital point was being wrestled for in a death-grapple between two armies; and all the offensive capacities of the one and all the defensive resources of the other were meeting, as they had been meeting during the long years.

In a time like that, of public peril and public need, private and personal affairs ought to be forgotten, but it was not so. Love and hate, confidence and jealousy, faithfulness and disloyalty, self-sacrifice and revenge, were still in human hearts. And these feelings would put to shame even the passions engendered in the bloody battles of the fearful warfare.

Edith Varney, for instance, had gone out of the telegraph office assured that the sacrifice she had made for her lover had resulted in the betrayal of her country; that Thorne had had not even the common gratitude to accede to her request, although she had saved his life, and, for the time being, his honor. Every cannon-shot, every crashing volley of musketry that came faintly or loudly across the hills seemed pointed straight at her heart. For all she knew, the dispatch had been sent, the cunningly devised scheme had been carried out, and into some undefended gap in the lines the federal troops were pouring. The defense would crumble and the army would be cut in two; the city of Richmond would be taken, and the Confederacy would be lost.

And she had done it! Would she have done it if she had known? She had certainly expected to establish such a claim upon Thorne by her interposition that he could not disregard it. But if she had known positively that he would have done what she thought he did, would she have sent him to his death? She put the question to herself in agony. And she realised with flushes of shame and waves of contrition that she would not, could not have done this thing. She must have acted as she had, whatever was to come of it. Whatever he was, whatever he did, she loved that man. She need not tell him, she need tell no one, there could be no fruition to that love. She must hide it, bury it in her bosom if she could, but for weal or woe she loved him above everything else, and for all eternity.

Where was he now? Her interposition had been but for a few moments. The truth was certain to be discovered. There would be no ultimate escape possible for him. She heard shots on occasion nearer than Petersburg, in the city streets. What could they mean? Short, short would be his shrift if they caught him. Had they caught him? Certainly they must, if they had not. She realised with a thrill that she had given him an opportunity to escape and that he had refused it. The sending of that dispatch had been more to him than life. Traitor, spy, secret service agent—was there anything that could be said for him? At least he was faithful to his own idea of duty.

She had met Caroline Mitford waiting in the lower hall of the telegraph office, and the two, convoyed by old Martha, had come home together.

Many curious glances had been thrown at them, but in these great movements that were toward, no one molested them. The younger girl had seen the agony in her friend's face. She had timidly sought to question her, but she had received no answer or no satisfaction to her queries. Refusing Caroline's proffered services when she reached home, Edith had gone straight to her own room and locked the door.

The affair had been irritating beyond expression to Mr. Arrelsford. It had taken him some time to establish his innocence and to get his release from General Randolph's custody. Meanwhile, everything that he had hoped to prevent had happened. To do him justice, he really loved Edith Varney, and the thought that her actions and her words had caused his own undoing and the failure of his carefully laid plans, filled him with bitterness, which he vented in increased animosity toward Thorne.

These were bitter moments to Mrs. Varney. She had become somewhat used to her husband being in the thick of things, but it was her boy now that was in the ranks. The noise of the cannon and the passing troops threw Howard into a fever of anxiety which was very bad for him.

And those were dreadful moments to Thorne. What had he done? He had risked everything, was ready to pay everything, would, indeed, be forced to do so in the end, and yet he had not done that which he had intended. Had he been false to his duty and to his country when he refused to send that telegram, being given the opportunity? He could not tell. The ethics of the question were beyond his present solution. The opportunity had come to him through a piece of sublime self-sacrifice on the part of the woman, who, knowing him thoroughly and understanding his plan and purpose, had yet perjured herself to save his life.

That life was hers, was it not? He had become her prisoner as much as if she had placed him under lock and key and held him without the possibility of communication with anyone. Her honor was involved. No, under the circumstances, he could not send the dispatch. The Confederates would certainly kill him if they caught him, and if they did not, and by any providential chance he escaped, his honor would compel him to report the circumstances, the cause of his failure, to his own superiors. Would they court-martial him for not sending the dispatch? Would they enter into his feelings, would they understand?

The popular idea of a secret service agent, a spy, was that he would stick at nothing. As such men were outside the pale of military brotherhood, so were they supposed to have a code of their own. Well, his code did not permit him to send the dispatch when his power to send it had been procured in such a way. It was not so much love for the woman as it was honor—her honor, suddenly put into his keeping—that turned him from the key. When both honor and love were thrown into the scale, there was no possibility of any other action. He could not see any call of duty paramount to them.

He stood looking at Foray for a while, and then, without a further command to that intensely surprised young man, or even a word of explanation, he seized his hat and coat and left the room. Foray was a keen-witted officer, he reviewed the situation briefly, and presently a great light dawned upon him. A certain admiration for Thorne developed in his breast, and as Allison opportunely came back at this juncture, he turned over the telegraph office to his subordinate, and in his turn went out on what he believed to be an exceedingly important errand.

Thorne found the streets full of people. He had not marked the beginning of the cannonading in the tumult of the office, but the lights, the bells pealing alarms from every church-steeple, the trampling of horses and men, and the roll of the gun-carriages apprised him of what was toward. Trusting that Thorne had been able to carry out his part, Grant was attacking the place indicated by "Plan 3" in heavy force.

What was Thorne to do? Obviously attempt to escape from Richmond, although it would be a matter of extreme difficulty on account of the alarm which now aroused every section. He could not go, either, until he had seen his brother. He surmised that he was dead, but he could not know that; and he determined not to attempt to leave without making assurance double sure. It was a duty he owed to his brother, to his father in the Union army, and to his superiors in the federal secret service. If that brother were alive, he must be at the Varney house. He fancied that he would run as little chance of being observed in the excitement going in that direction as in any other, and he started to make his way there.

The fact that Edith was there influenced him also. Was the call of love and the living as great, or greater than the call of duty and the dying or the dead? Who shall say?

And the remote chance that he might be observed on the way was taken by his ever-vigilant enemy; for Arrelsford, upon obtaining his freedom, had sent the troops at the disposal of the secret service to hunt him down, and one of them caught sight of him. The shout of the observer apprised him of his discovery.

He threw one glance behind him and then ran for his life. He had no especial hope of escaping, but he might get to the Varney house ahead of the soldiers, and he might see his brother, and he might see the woman he loved for a moment before he was taken and killed.

If it had not been for the two he would have stopped and given himself up. Somehow he did not care for life. His life was forfeit to the Federals and the Confederates alike. When she thought to save it, Edith Varney had doomed him. Also he felt that she had damned him. But he ran on and on, doubling and turning on his tracks; white-faced, desperate, his breath coming fainter, his heart beating faster, as he ran.

CHAPTER XVII.

Wilfred Plays the Man.

A sharp contrast to the noise outside was presented by the quiet of the Varney house inside. The sewing women, in view of the attack and the movements of the boys and the old men, had separated sooner than they had intended and had gone their several ways. Old Jonas, frightened to death, remained locked up in the closet where he had been left by Arrelsford's men. Martha was upstairs in Howard's room, making ready to watch over him during the night.

Caroline Mitford had not gone home. She had sent word that she intended to pass the night at the Varney house. Somehow she thought they seemed to need her. She was standing by one of the long front windows in the drawing-room, now a scene of much disorder because of the recent struggle.

Caroline stared out of the window at the flashes of light. She listened, with heaving breast and throbbing heart, to the roar of the cannon and the rattle of musketry. She had heard both many times lately, but now it was different, for Wilfred was there. Mrs. Varney came upon her with her hand pressed against her breast, her face white and staring, tears brimming her eyes, but, as usual, Mrs. Varney was so engrossed with her own tremendous troubles that she had little thought for the girl.

"Caroline," she began anxiously, "tell me what happened. Edith won't speak to me. She has locked herself up in her room. What was it? Where has she been? What—"

"She was at the telegraph office," answered Caroline in a low voice.

"What did she do there? What happened there?"

"I am not sure."

"But try to tell me, dear."

"I would if I could, Mrs. Varney, but I was afraid and ran out and waited for her in the hall. The rest of them—" The girl broke off as the deep tones of the city bells clanged sharply above the diapason of artillery.

"It's the alarm bell," said Mrs. Varney.

"Yes," said Caroline, "they are calling out the last reserves."

"Yes; hark to the cannonading. Isn't it awful?" returned Mrs. Varney. "They must be making a terrible attack tonight. Lieutenant Maxwell was right; that quiet spell was a signal."

"There goes another battery of artillery," said Caroline, staring through the window. "A man told us that they were sending them all over to Cemetery Hill. That's where the fighting is, Cemetery Hill."

"General Varney's division is to the right of that position, or was the last time I heard from him," said Mrs. Varney anxiously.

"I am afraid they are going to have a bad time of it tonight," said Caroline, drawing the curtains and turning away from the window.

"I'm afraid so," was the rejoinder. "Now, try to think, dear, who was at the telegraph office? Can't you tell me something that occurred that will explain Edith's silence? She looks like death, and—"

"I can't tell you anything except that they arrested Mr. Arrelsford."

"Mr. Arrelsford! You don't mean that?"

"Yes, I do," answered Caroline. "General Randolph—I went and brought him there, because they wouldn't send my telegram—he was in a fearful temper—"

"But Edith? Can't you tell me what she did?"

"I can't, Mrs. Varney, for I don't know. I waited for her in the hall, and when she came out she couldn't speak. Then we hurried home. I tried to get her to tell me, but she wouldn't say a word except that her heart was broken, and that's all I know, Mrs. Varney, truly, truly."

"I believe you, my dear. I know you would tell me if you could."

"I certainly would, for I love—"

There was a loud ring at the front door. It was evidently unlocked, for, without waiting for an answer, it was thrown open roughly, and through the hall and into the drawing-room stalked Mr. Arrelsford. He was wildly excited, evidently in a tremendous hurry, and utterly oblivious to manners or anything else. He had been checked and thwarted so many times that he was in a bad temper for anything.

"Is your daughter in the house?" he began roughly, without any further preliminaries or salutation, without even removing his hat.

"Answer," he said harshly.

She bowed her head in the affirmative, scarcely able to speak in her indignation at his manner and bearing.

"I wish to see her."

"I don't believe she will care to receive you at present," returned her mother quietly.

"What she cares to do at present is of small consequence. I must see her at once. Shall I go up to her room with these men, or will you have her down here?"

The room had filled with soldiers as the two spoke together.

"Neither the one nor the other, sir," said Mrs. Varney, who was not in the least afraid of Mr. Arrelsford or his soldiers, "until I know your business with her."

"My business—a few questions—I've got a few questions to ask her. Listen to that noise out yonder? Do you hear those guns and the troops passing by? Now, you know what 'Attack tonight, Plan 3,' means."

"Is that the attack?" asked Mrs. Varney.

"That's the attack. They are breaking through our lines at Cemetery Hill. That was the place indicated by 'Plan 3.' We are rushing to the front all the reserves we have, to the last man and boy, but they may not get there in time."

"What, may I ask, has my daughter to do with it?"

"Do with it? She did it!" asserted Arrelsford bitterly.

"What!" exclaimed Mrs. Varney, in a great outburst of indignation. "How dare you!"

"We had him in a trap, under arrest, the telegraph under guard, when she brought in that commission. We would have shot him in a moment, but they took me prisoner and let him go."

"Impossible!" whispered Mrs. Varney. "You don't mean—"

"Yes, she did. She put the game in his hands. He got control of the wires and the dispatch went through. As soon as I could get to headquarters I explained, and they saw the trick. They rushed the guard back, but the scoundrel had got away. Foray was gone, too, and Allison knew nothing about it, but we're after him, and if she knows where he is," he turned as if to leave the room and ascend the stairs, "I will get it out of her."

"You don't suppose that my daughter would—" began Mrs. Varney.

"I suppose everything."

"I will not believe it," persisted the mother.

"We can't wait for what you believe," said Arrelsford roughly, this time taking a step toward the door.

Mrs. Varney caught him by the arm.

"Let me speak to her," she pleaded.

"No, I will see her myself."

But Miss Mitford, who had been the indirect cause of so much trouble, once more interposed. She had listened to him with scarcely less surprise than that developing in Mrs. Varney's breast. She took a malicious joy in thwarting the secret service agent. She barred the way, her slight figure in the door, with arms extended.

"Where is your order for this?" she asked.

Arrelsford stared at her in surprise.

"Get out of my way," he said curtly; "I have a word or two to say to you after I have been upstairs."

"Show me your order," persisted the girl, who made not the slightest attempt to give way.

"It's department business and I don't require an order."

"You are mistaken about that," said Caroline with astonishing resourcefulness. "This is a private house, it isn't the telegraph office or the secret service department. If you want to go upstairs or see anybody against their will, you will have to bring an order. I don't know much, but I know enough for that."

Arrelsford turned to Mrs. Varney.

"Am I to understand, madam," he began, "that you refuse—"

But before Mrs. Varney could answer, the soldiers Arrelsford had brought with him gave way before the advent of a sergeant and another party of men. The sergeant advanced directly to Mrs. Varney, touched his cap to her, and began:

"Are you the lady that lives here, ma'am?"

"Yes, I am Mrs. Varney."

"I have an order from General Randolph's office to search this house for—"

"Just in time," said Arrelsford, stepping toward the sergeant; "I will go through the house with you."

"Can't go through on this order," said the sergeant shortly.

"You were sent here to—" began Mrs. Varney.

"Yes; sorry to trouble you, ma'am, but we'll have to be quick about it. If we don't find him here we've got to follow him down Franklin street; he's over this way somewhere."

"Who are you? What do you want?"

"Man named Thorne, captain of artillery," answered the sergeant; "that's what he went by, at least. Here, two of you this way! That room in there and the back of the house. Two of you outside," pointing to the windows. "Cut off those windows. The rest upstairs."

The men rapidly dispersed, obeying the commands of the sergeant, and began a thorough search of the house. Caroline Mitford preceded them up the stairs to Edith's room. Arrelsford, after a moment's hesitation, stepped toward the door and went out, followed by his men. Without a word of acknowledgment or even a bow to Mrs. Varney, he and his men presently left the house. As he did so, two of the sergeant's men re-entered the room, shoving old Jonas roughly before them. The man's livery was torn and dirty, his head was bound up, and he showed signs of the rough handling he had undergone.

"Get Out of My Way," He Said Curtly.

"Where did you get that?" asked the sergeant contemptuously.

"He was locked in a closet, sir."

"What were you doing in there?" He turned to the old negro. "If you don't answer me, we will shoot the life out of you." He raised his revolver threateningly. "Belongs to you, I reckon," he said to Mrs. Varney.

"Yes, my butler; they locked him up. Mr. Arrelsford wants him for carrying a message."

"That's all right," said the sergeant. "If he wants him, he can have him."

Offensive Breath Caused Usually By Catarrh

Simple Remedy Discovered That Cures Without Drugs.

The American people suffer more from Catarrh than from any other disease. It undermines more constitutions and creates more sickness than all other diseases combined. It is, therefore, very dangerous.

You can't successfully treat catarrh by internal dosing—you must in some way send a purifying, healing spirit through the breathing organs so that the germs can be reached. This you do every time you inhale Catarrhozone. Its rich essences and healing balsams are breathed all through the nose, throat and lungs and effectively destroy every trace of Catarrh. This is a proven fact.

I endorse Catarrhozone because I know of six bad cases of Catarrh, including my own, that it has cured. It is a sensible remedy because it is capable of going where the disease is. I believe it cures quicker than other remedy because it gets sooner to the source of the disease than anything else I know of. I had headaches, bad breath and much stomach trouble associated with my Catarrh, but they have disappeared since using Catarrhozone, which keeps me free from colds, headaches, catarrh and all winter ills." OTTO E. KRAMER. Belleville, Ont.

Catarrhozone is needed in every home. Large size lasts 2 months price $1.00; small size 50c, trial size 25c. At all storekeepers and druggists or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y. and Kingston, Canada.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

JUDGING MEN'S AGES

Bachelor Claims Young Women Cannot Do It Correctly

"Women—especially young women—seem to have no capacity for judging a man's age." This is the mature opinion of "Bachelor of Forty," who has made some exhaustive tests in the matter, and has some interesting conclusions to advance. The truth of his statements, he says, can be tested by all, and he is convinced that anyone who cares to take the trouble to find out will discover that men between the ages of 25 and 50 always appear from five to ten years older to the ordinary young woman in her twenties. After 50 and up to 65 men appear to these same young women as being from five to ten years younger than they really are. There is, however, a period in the middle thirties when young women seem to judge a man's age fairly exactly.

Everybody is building Concrete Roads

CONCRETE roads have literally taken Canada by storm. From Halifax to Vancouver, road commissions, town and county engineers, town councils and good roads associations, have been quick to discover the remarkable advantages of the concrete pavement. Its use, either for country highways, or for city streets, is so clearly the best solution of the good roads problem, that there has been little of the delay which usually accompanies the introduction of a comparatively new method.

Experiences such as the one which Mr. Hines reports are responsible for this rapid growth in popularity:—

An Authority's Statement

Extract from paper recently presented by Edward N. Hines, Chairman of the Board of County Road Commissioners, Wayne County, Mich., before the National Association of Cement Users, at Pittsburgh, Pa.

"It is a sad commentary on the conduct of an undertaking of any magnitude, that individuals, municipalities, states or nations, all seem to find it necessary to do a certain amount of experimenting and dilly-dallying before accepting the conclusions and avoiding the failures of previous demonstrations. This is particularly true of the various phases of the good roads movement.

"The initial cost of a good concrete road is little, if any, greater than that of a first-class bituminous road. One of the greatest fallacies indulged in by communities starting to improve their highways is that cheapness in cost of original construction of roads means economy and that the highway official who can build the greatest area of roads at the least outlay per square yard is working for the community's best interest.

"On one of the main highways out of Detroit, Grand River road, the first two miles is tar macadam. If someone had offered to build this road absolutely without one penny's cost to Wayne County, stipulating only that we should maintain it in a fairly average condition, at the end of eight years we would have been money ahead by rejecting the offer and building it of concrete under our present specifications. Of course, six years ago, when we built the road, we did not possess this knowledge, but our experience was one of the reasons for abandoning the construction of this type of road and turning to concrete. When it comes to annual cost, the concrete road stands pre-eminent. With more than 60 miles of concrete road in Wayne County, some of it in its fourth year, we have spent less than $300 on its surface for maintenance and this is what makes this type of road the cheapest of all roads."

Our Good Roads Lectures, illustrated with lantern slides showing photographs of roads of all kinds, and delivered by members of our own staff of road experts, will be given free of charge to town councils, road commissions, good roads associations, or any other organizations interested in better roads. THE OTTAWA GOVERNMENT WILL ENCOURAGE SHIPBUILDING HERE

Made in Canada Principle is Being Applied by The Dominion Cabinet

(Special to The Times.)

Ottawa, June 27.—The present government is out to assist home industries. It wants to develop Canadian methods where they are as good as any other. The Liberals prated long and loud of their desires to develop Canadian interests but it has been left to the present government to carry all the talk into effect. The announcement has just been made that plans are being prepared by the marine department for what is designed to be the largest and most powerful ice breaker steamer in the Canadian service. The new ship will be not only an ice breaker, built with a view to Canadian conditions, but also will have a modern wrecking outfit, which there is considerable need on the St. Lawrence. The vessel will be headquartered in Quebec and utilized on the St. Lawrence to facilitate the early opening of navigation and the prolongation of the season of it. She will cost half a million dollars, have a length of 275 feet, width of 66 feet, and depth of 30 feet. The indicated horse-power will be 10 thousand. The vessel will be built on the lines of the Ermack, the great Russian ice breaker.

To Be Built in Canada

The contract which has been entered into by the department representing the government stipulates that the ship must be built in Canada. This is the method which the Borden government takes to answer the Liberal sneers that they were not desirous of assisting Canadian industries.

The government is also about to issue a call for tenders for the steamer Scout. The vessel is to be used in the lighthouse service between Montreal and the Welland canal. It is to be 155 feet long, 30 feet wide, and 13 feet deep. It will also be stipulated in the advertisements that the vessel must be built in Canada.

It can be seen that the made in Canada principle is being strenuously applied by this government.

HAS FAITH IN CANADA

Montreal, Que., June 27.—The activities of the Canadian Pacific Railway and its influence on the financial, mercantile, manufacturing and labour interests of Canada, will be partially appreciated when it is stated that in the current year the company's appropriations for the construction of additional railway mileage, for cars and locomotives, terminal facilities at St. John, Montreal, Toronto, Fort William, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver, and elsewhere, for ocean steamships and hotels, extensions of the telegraph system, shops, sidings and improvements generally in Canada, will approximate no less a sum than, $100,000,000.

BRITISH AND FRENCH FLAGS INTERTWINED FOR FAREWELL

President Poincare Given a Great Parting Ovation as Twenty Six Warships Lined Up in Rainbow Fashion at Dover

London, June 27.—President Raymond Poincare, after being the guest of King George and the British nation since Tuesday, left this morning for France amid a great display of cordial enthusiasm. King George, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, and his son Prince Arthur of Connaught, together with a brilliant assemblage of court dignitaries, Cabinet Ministers and military and naval officers, gathered at Victoria Station to bid him farewell.

Great crowds lined the streets from York House to the station, and loudly acclaimed the President as he passed, for during his short stay he has made himself extremely popular.

The royal train placed at his disposal by the King took him to Dover, where he embarked on a French warship amid deafening salutes from a fleet of twenty-six powerful British and French warships dressed in rainbow fashion, with the French and British colors intertwined. Several of the British battleships acted as an escort to the President across the Channel.

AN ARREST MOMENTARILY ON IN THE CALBECK MURDER CASE

Chief of Police Says Action in Collingwood Tragedy Is to be Taken

Collingwood, Ont., June 27.—That there will be an arrest made before night in connection with the shooting on June 15th of the wife of James Calbeck, jr., was the opinion expressed here this morning by Chief of Police McLachlan.

The coroner's jury meets at one o'clock to receive the results of the investigation pursued here during the past few days by Provincial Detective Reburn, and the chief intimated that the evidence would be very important and that the responsibility for the shooting would be fixed to an extent sufficient to warrant summary action. As to the new developments, Chief McLachlan and Detective Reburn were both reticent.

Examined Witness

County Crown Attorney Cotter of Barrie arrived in town last night and this morning conducted a private examination of the new witnesses secured, preparing his case for the jury.

Mrs. Calbeck, a woman of about 35 was shot through the body with a bullet from a 22-calibre rifle of an antiquated pattern. Her husband, and her husband's father, James Calbeck, sr., were in the house at the time and they called the neighbors and a doctor, stating that the woman had been accidentally shot by her son, James, aged about three and a half years. The story was that the child was suffering from toothache, and that the mother was sitting with him in the kitchen. The child was playing with the rifle and with it resting on the table pulled the trigger.

Under Police Surveillance

A strong feeling that the story should be investigated resulted in an inquest being held on June 18th before Coroner Dr. McFaul, and adjournment being made later to permit of some enquiries by Provincial Detectives, whose time apparently has not been wasted. Since the case developed important features those who were occupants of the house on the night of the shooting have been kept under a quiet police surveillance to ensure their presence if required. Public opinion in the town seems to favor strongly the theory that the child was not responsible for the shooting.

TO REGAIN A HEALTHY GIRLISH COMPLEXION

(From the Feminine World)

If you would have a clear, fresh, girlish complexion, one ounce of ordinary mercolized wax will aid you in this direction more than shelves of cosmetics. It produces a natural beauty. This wax, procurable at any drugstore, completely absorbs a bad complexion, revealing the healthy, young skin underneath. Its work is done so gradually, day by day, that no inconvenience is caused. The wax is applied at night, like cold cream, and removed in the morning with soap and water.

Another valuable rejuvenating treatment—this for wrinkles—is to bathe your face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witch hazel. This has a remarkable action in smoothing out the lines and "firming up" the loose tissue.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL ATCHISON HAS RETIRED

Ottawa, June 27.—A militia order this morning officially announced the retirement of Lieut.-Col. G. Atchison as Brigade Commander of the First Division, 1st Infantry Brigade, London, Ontario. The appointment is gazetted of Lieut.-Col. G. S. Maunsell of the Royal Canadian Engineers to be Director-General of the Engineer Services.

KEEP CHILDREN OFF THE STREETS

Lesson to Mothers From the Tragic End of Little George Babcock.

Toronto, June 27.—Another recommendation to the mothers of Toronto to make some effort to keep their children from playing on the streets where there is much automobile traffic was made by the coroner's jury that inquired into the death of the little lad, George Babcock who was killed by being struck by Mr. McGillivray Knowles' motor car on Wednesday on Leslie street.

The evidence of Mr. Knowles and several other eye-witnesses of the accident showed that it was practically unavoidable by the driver of the auto as the little chap ran across the road directly in front of the car which was taking part in the procession of cars conveying orphan children to Scarboro for a day's outing.

WHAT TO DO AND NOT TO DO WHEN THE WEATHER SIZZLES

Dr. Hastings, Medical Officer of Health, Says Don't Eat! Don't Drink! Don't Worry!

Toronto, June 27.—If you want to keep cool and avoid illness during this torrid weather, study the following advice which is tendered the public by Dr. Hastings, Medical Health Officer:

1. Eat no more than you have to. Avoid solids, such as meat, eggs, fats and other heat producers. Eat fruit, vegetables and cereals. If you can endure hunger, it is better to eat nothing.

"A person who cannot eat this weather is fortunate," said Dr. Hastings. "Food is rather a danger than a benefit."

2. Drink a great deal. Water and buttermilk are the best beverages. Avoid intoxicating liquors.

3. Do not worry about excessive perspiration. It is a sign that the system is holding its own against the temperature. Perspiration produces thirst. Thirst produces perspiration. Thus the body works in perpetual motion.

3. Wear light clothing, and approach nakedness as nearly as propriety will permit.

"This is the time when the conventionalities must go by the board" he declares.

5. Try to get some sleep. Cold water is the best aid. Frequent baths cool the body and produce drowsiness. Get up in the night and take a cold shower or sponge bath. If you wake in an hour, take another bath. Brief applications of cold water to the body do not hurt the system. Only long immersions are dangerous.

6. Do not lose your temper or indulge in simmering thought or fiery fulminations. These things are hot in themselves.

If you follow these rules Dr. Hastings believes that you will escape partial sunstroke, dizziness, sick stomach, light-headedness, temporary blindness, biliousness and despondency, and will remain fairly well and cheerful in spite of the soaring thermometer.

To-day—Easterly winds, showery and cooler.

AN OLD INVITATION OF BIG LOCAL INTEREST

The Times was yesterday handed what might be called a local historical document. This is an invitation, printed on waxed paper, with appropriate "cuts" and designs, to a ball given by the Peterborough Fire Brigade in the Huffman House, now the Oriental, on May 24th, 1860.

The Committe of Management were Capt. F. Weir, Secretary A. E. Fhaw D. Jamieson, M. Halpin, Treas. W. G. McBain, James Delaney, J. C. Robertson, Sec'y. of Committe, and Tom Rutherford, Master of Ceremonies.

Tickets cost $1.50, admitting lady and gentleman. Music furnished by Martin's Quadrille Band. The invitations were printed in the Times office, and thus, it is needless to state were fine specimens of the printer's art.

HOPE TO LIVE LONG ¿ THEN GET MARRIED

Longevity of Double-Harnessed Folks Declared Unmistakably to be Shown.

Chicago, June 27.—Married persons live longer than those who are single, according to statistics gathered by Dr. C. St. Clair Drake, of the City Health Department, and made public to-day. He has figured out that the death rate of Chicago bachelors is 29½ per cent, higher than that of the married men. The mortality rate of unmarried women is 40 per cent. higher than that of married women, he says.

PATRIOTIC IRISHMAN GIVES TIMES A ROAST

The Times was yesterday in receipt of the following letter from Mr. T. Hurley, the well known local real estate agent:—

Thursday, June 26, '13.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Your editorial on Canadian Emmigration and the countries from which they should be selected, I consider an insult to myself and to every man in Canada of Irish birth or parentage. Did you intend it as such? Please explain in Saturday's issue, and oblige.

T. HURLEY.

Mr. Hurley is evidently a patriotic son of old Erin. Whilst we cannot agree with him that any offense was meant or implied towards Ireland, after using a fine tooth comb in the editorial referred to, the only possible justification for Mr. Hurley's complaint is where the editorial said "Canada wants immigrants from England, Scotland and the Northern countries of Europe." If it is any sop to Mr. Hurley's susceptibilities, we might say that the article in question as written, said "Canada wants immigrants from England, Scotland, Ireland and the Northern Countries of Europe." By the inadvertent and accidental omission of a "slug," due honor was unfortunately not given to Ireland.

BUSINESS MEN'S BIG EXCURSION AGAIN WINS

The 16th annual excursion of the Businessmen of Peterborough, was run yesterday afternoon to Rice Lake per steamer Esturion. About 100 of Peterborough's leading professional and business men availed themselves of the outing, and spent a most enjoyable afternoon, apart from the heat of city bricks and pavements among the natural beauties of the Otonabee. It might be remarked incidentally that a gentleman from Lindsay on the excursion was the only "kicker" As the Esturion wound its way sidately between the vine and tree clad banks of the river, the Lindsay man said: "What's a river without stumps?" His mind was evidently on the classic Scugog.

A well served fish dinner was provided at six o'clock, after which, as well as before, games were in order. After dinner a baseball game was played between the professionals and the business men. Not to raise hard feelings, the result is not given. The party returned during the evening and declared that yesterday's excursion was the best of the series.

UNITED STATES TO JOIN FIGHT TO SUPPRESS OPIUM TRAFFIC

Bills Introduced in Congress to Prohibit Ships Carrying Opium Touching At U. S. Ports--An International Treaty to Cover Matter

Washington, June 27.—Enlistment of the United States with other great world powers in the fight to suppress the opium and cocaine traffic was proposed in the House today. The House took up and expected to pass before night two bills introduced by Representative Francis Burton Harrison, of New York, proposing total prohibition of the use, importation and manufacture of opium and its derivatives in this country. The bill provides that intra-State as well as interstate commerce in opium shall be abolished. It prohibits a ship with any opium in its hold from stopping at any United States port.

Passage of the Harrison bills today will be followed by an "anti-opium" conference at The Hague of representatives of all the great nations to ratify an international treaty which will put an end to opium traffic.

HUNDREDS SAW SIX DROWN IN SAD ACCIDENT EDMONTON

Bank Manager Case Lost His Bride in Motor-Boat Tragedy On the Saskatchewan River

Edmonton, Alta., June 27.—Before hundreds of spectators who were enjoying themselves on the Saskatchewan river banks last evening, six well known Edmonton young people were drowned close to the low level bridge by the overturning of a gasoline launch. Amid fruitless cries for aid, six of the seven occupants of the boat sank in the fast running river.

On the trip down the river, while the party was gay with laughter, there was a sudden jar to the boat, due to it striking a snag. The engine stopped and from the jar the boat overturned, precipitating its occupants into the water. Mr. Case, who is a strong swimmer, after a vain attempt to rescue his wife, saw that the feat was impossible, and, himself already exhausted, struck out for the shore, which he barely reached.

Crowds Could Not Help.

A large crowd just leaving the ball grounds saw the launch overturn and rushed for boats, but already the victims of the treacherous river had sunk from sight.

Mrs. Case, one of the drowned, had only returned with her husband from their honeymoon on June 16. They were married on May 27 in Spokane. Meredith and his wife were also a newly married couple. Case, the only one saved, is prostrated as a result, and is now under a physician's care. He is the manager of the west-end branch of the Imperial Bank here.

The authorities are dragging for the bodies.

BOYS AT LUNCH STARTED FIRE

Cigarettes Too Near a Can of Gasoline—One Lad Was Badly Burned About Legs.

Toronto, June 27.—A number of lads whiling away their lunch hour in the repair shop balk of the premises of the Empire Typewriter Co., 15 Adelaide west, some cigarettes and a five gallon can of gasoline were the materials that started a fire and resulted in one of the boys, Bertram Day, of 150 Roehampton avenue, being badly burned about the legs.

In some manner that the boys have not been able to explain the gasoline can caught fire and young day made a gallant effort to throw it out of the back window into the lane. The other boys rang in the alarm and the fire was confined to the interior of the repair shop which was badly damaged, while the premises upstairs occupied by the Tea Pot Inn were damaged considerably by smoke. The total damage was estimated at $2,000.

JACK JOHNSTON PUGILIST MUST SAIL SOON OR GO

Dominion Authorities Say He Must Use Ticket If He Has One

Ottawa, June 27.—If Jack Johnston the negro pugilist, does not at once prove to the immigration officials in Montreal that he holds a through ticket to France or St. Petersburg, as he claims he has, he will be arrested and deported back to Chicago as quickly as the machinery of the law will permit. Further, if Johnson holds such a ticket and does not use it without delay, he will be arrested and sent back to the United States.

This morning the Immigration Department was informed by the United States vice-consul in Montreal, over the long distance telephone that he had received information that Johnson was in Montreal, and he asked on behalf of the United States Government to have steps taken by the Dominion immigration officials to have the pugilist deported.

Must Take Next Boat

Johnson came into Canada through Windsor on Wednesday, and as he held a through ticket to Europe, he was regarded by the Dominion immigration officials as a tourist. No official word has been received that he had been convicted of an offence against the criminal code of the United States, and as he was not suffering from any physical disease of a contagious nature, he could not be refused permission to pass through Canada.

This is the explanation given by the immigration officials here. They said that officers of the department had been instructed to arrest Johnson should he attempt to stay in this country after the date the vessel he intends to sail on expires.

YORK COUNTY SHERIFF IS STRICKEN ON THE STREET

Mr. Daville Collapsed Near His Home and Succumbed Two Hours Later

Toronto, June 27.—While on his way to the City Hall this morning shortly after nine o'clock, Francis T. Daville, Sheriff of York County, was overcome by an attack of heart failure brought on by the heat and fell down on the sidewalk on Charles street and although he rallied later in Grace Hospital, to such an extent that his wife, who had been summoned thought that he was in no danger and went away, he succumbed to the attack at 11.20 o'clock.

Mr. Daville left his home in the La Plaza Apartments in apparently good health and started to walk along Charles street toward Yonge, but before he had gone more than a few steps he suddenly collapsed and fell prostrate on the sidewalk. Dr. R. L. Stewart, of Church street was summoned and a few minutes after his arrival Matthews ambulance was called to take Mr. Daville to the Hospital.

HEAVY HITTING A FEATURE IN YESTERDAY'S DOUBLE-HEADER

Two good games of ball were played yesterday at Riverside Park, when the Petes and Guelph lined up for a double-header. In the first game the Guelph aggregation scored two runs, and the Petes came back in the last half of the first getting two and tieing the score. Hilliard was there with the stick yesterday, and was directly responsible for the only two runs made in the game, when he tried to break one of the windows in the brewery with the ball, and almost succeeded; he placed the ball out over the brewery sheds into the yard, and made the first home run of the season at the Park. Immediately following him came Peggy Swartz, who made a nice drive down the third base line, and right through Fryer's mit; Peggy dug his toes in the ground and managed to get across home plate safe enough, but alas, the eagle eye of Umps Daly noted that he did not touch the first base, and after the cheering died out the Umps called Peggy out. The Petes could not connect with Dorbeck for any more runs in this game, and the final score was 5—2 in favor of Guelph.

Again yesterday Umpire Daly emphasized the fact that he was running the game, and when Fryer in the fourth innings, tried to tell him that he could not see straight on the foul line, and a few minutes later deliberately went out and moved the flag on the line some ten feet farther out, Umps Daly put him out of the game amid great cheering from the fans.

The second game opened up with a run for Guelph in the first innings, and then the gates closed on them as far as runs were concerned. The score at the finish stood 4—1 in the Petes favor. The boys batted well yesterday and although a few errors crept into the game, the fans were kept on edge all through by the brilliant playing of the boys. Trout was there as usual with all the life possible, and kept the boys on their toes all the while. In the third innings the Petes tallied two more runs and in the fifth another. This game was quite fast throughout and was only seven innings.

UGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 365 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

CANADA'S NORTHLAND

Rich Areas of Agricultural Land Still Remain to be Opened

So much is sometimes made of the severity of the Canadian winter that it is generally taken as a corollary that only a comparatively narrow belt of land reaching across the continent is really suitable for permanent settlement and habitation. It is an impression which needs to be remedied, and in this respect a statement of his Majesty's Trade Inspector to the Dominion of Canada, is of considerable interest.

"To state with accuracy," he says. "just how far the truly habitable—the agricultural and industrial—area of Canada may extend northwards would be a difficult task, but a study of the climatic conditions of the Dominion seems to show that it is only in the centre of the continent that the extreme rigors of winter and the infertility of the soil need confine industrial and agricultural settlement to a narrow area. In the province of Quebec, in Ontario, and in the West, settlement is moving steadily northward; in the former province, the district of Lake St. John, at the head of the Saguenay, 176 miles norheast of the City of Quebec, is proving itself a territory of great value; in what is called New Ontario—the district between Lake Nipissing and James Bay—a mineral region of great wealth is attracting a large influx of population.

"The Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, operated by the Ontario Government is expected to bring settlement into the area known as the Great Clay Belt lying north of the height of land above Lake Huron, and reported by the engineers of the National Transcontinental Railway to contain some 13,635 square miles of excellent land well suited for agricultural settlement. This estimate moreover, refers only to land actually explored in the course of the railway surveys, and the reports referred to states that the fertile belt may cover a still greater extent of territory.

"In marked contrast to the western plains, northern Ontario is a forest country, in this respect corresponding to the original character of the fertile and now closely settled provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Although such a country presents certain important advantages, the clearing of forests and preparing the aind for cultivation involves heavy labor, and every Canadian knows something of the splendid qualities of industry and courage exhibited during the last generation in converting virgin forests into smiling homesteads by the deplorable but necessary process of burning magnificent timber on the spot where it grew because there was no market for it. Conditions in this respect have completely changed, and the demand for timber of all kinds is now such that the cost of clearing accessible land is more than covered by the value of its timber.

"In the western provinces the northward advance of settlement is very marked, and there is every indication that the construction of railway communication from Edmonton to the Valleys of the Athabaska and the Peace will enable the spread of population to extend itself some 700 miles north of the American frontier. There is indeed ample ground for the opinion that the exploration of the resources of the hinterland of Quebec, of New Ontario, and of Northern Alberta will offer in the immediate future abundant incentive for the continued flow of capital and population towards the Dominion."

Another "Ancient Relic"

Another interesting "find" was made by a Swansea gentleman in the neighborhood of Bacon Hole, Gower, Wales. It consists of a bone containing a tooth, and is supposed to be a portion of the skull of a rhinoceros. The relic is supposed to be of considerable age.

BIBLICAL IGNORANCE

Members of Parliament Who Have Made Amusing Errors

Some interesting stories are told of members of the British House of Commons who were lacking in Biblical knowledge. For instance, in a debate a few years ago Mr. George Wyndham referred to David and the fifty fighting men he had in a cave. "Not David—Daniel," interjected Sir Edward Grey. "I am much obliged to my right honorable friend," continued Mr. Wyndham; "of course I meant Daniel," as the House resounded with laughter and shouts of "Obadiah!"

A little later the same evening Sir Edward again aired his Biblical knowledge by speaking of the feeding of the prophets on bread and water, when Sir William Evans Gordon convulsed everybody by suggesting that the prophetic menu consisted of locusts and wild honey.

Certainly a few lessons on the Bible would have been useful to a good many statesmen, past and present. Mr. Gladstone once committed the atrocity of putting Daniel in the fiery furnace, and made the Psalmist responsible for the words, "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb." John Bright saddled St. Paul with the well-known aphorism, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness"; and Lord John Russell made a touching reference to Pharaoh and his host struggling in the engulfing waters of the Jordan.

Viscount on Death Duties

Part of the Normanhurst estate of Viscount Hythe, son of the Earl of Brassey, near Bexhill, is to be sold for small holdings, the tenants being given the option of buying their holdings by payments spread over twenty-five years.

In making the announcement Viscount Hythe said that during the past twenty-five years he had only received one per cent. from the Normanhurst estate. Owing to the burden of taxation and death duties it was impossible for anyone to live in his father's home, and if he outlived his father Normanhurst would have to be shut up.

GIRLS WEDDED PHOTOS

Japanese "Picture Brides" Refused Admission to United States

Sixteen Japanese "picture brides" were barred from entrance to the United States at San Fransisco, Immigration Commissioner Backus having boarded the liner Siberia and refused to pass their immigration clearance papers.

For three years the so-called Japanese picture brides had been flocking into the United States through San Fransisco in great numbers. Every steamer brought from ten to fifty of these girls, who firmly clasped the picture of their "intended" in their dainty arms. They went through the form of marriage in Japan to a Japanese living in California, using the photo as a proxy.

Treaty rights gave them the right to enter so far as they could show their good intention of marrying, but the department at Washington ruled them out on the ground that they were infected with hookworms.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Prohibition prohibits in China. Sixty-seven men have been burned alive there for producing opium.

The Hamilton Spectator, in an intimate study of the high cost of living, suggests that eggs should be sold by the pound instead of by the dozen. Why not take the jackets off and sell them by the quart?

Three dividends of 200 per cent. each have been declared by the Timiskaming & Hudson Bay Mining Company since February 12, this year. If that isn't silver gem with a diamond setting we miss our guess.

Across the line it is predicted that Roosevelt will "come back" if Wilson fails to make good. If this is Teddy's only hope, it begins to look as if another trip to Africa is his only chance to keep in the lime light.

Champ Clark, speaker of the House at Washington, is more anxious about stopping those 2,000 American farmers coming to Canada each week than he is about the work of those fakers who are distributing bogus dispatches to the American press about the prairie provinces being burned by drouth.

CHILLING THE SUFFRAGETTES.

A real damper was cast on the ardor of the militant suffragettes in England by the judgment of the London court awarding damages of $7,000 to ninety-three merchants whose windows were smashed by the forces of Mrs. Pankhurst? Here the hunger strike and other devices will not work, and neither can the defendants appeal to public sympathy on the ground that they are suffering governmental oppression.

The persons who are holding the suffragettes to an accounting are plain tradesmen acting in defence of their rights as citizens, and the demand of these persons that they shall be reimbursed for the damages maliciously done to their property cannot be contrued as tyrannizing over down-trodden womankind.

This is a very different matter from dealing with government officials and police authorities against whom it is easy to stir up a feeling of hostility among certain classes. When it comes to contending for the right to destroy the property of private persons not concerned in the suffrage controversy, Mrs. Pankhurst and her followers will find that they have been overestimating pub,ic patience and tolerance. The present bill of damages is but a beginning, and what the reckoning may be in case all those whose property has been damaged seek redress is not easy to estimate.

FINANCIAL FLUCTUATIONS

Among the general causes of financial fluctations, war must be put in the first place. War does not reduce the amount of money in the world; it simply diverts it from normal channels. Dismissing the Balkan belligerents from consideration, we all know that Russia, Austria-Hungary and Germany have been put to a large expense by hostilities in which they were not engaged. This means the diversion of money from its customary channels. War, and rumors of war, have a potent influence in taking money out of circulation. The big financiers are helpless when the thrifty house-wife puts the spare family cash in a stocking instead of depositing it in a bank.

The vast expansion of business is another thing that makes money hard to get. All the world has been engaging in works of development of a public or private nature. There never has been a time in the history of mankind when such an enormous amount of municipal improvements have been carried on as has been the case in the past year or two. There never was a time when private business has expanded as it has during the same period. In addition to the effect of war, everyone has been going ahead a little too fast for the supply of money. But when you remember that Canada and the United States alone are producing some fifteen billion dollars worth of commodities every year, we can make up our minds that no depression can possibly be long continued.

Bermuda's Coral Houses

Bermuda is the original home of the "White House." The simplest bungalow is built of the same material as the most pretentious villa, in almost precisely the same way. White coral blocks cut from the backbone of the islands are used for all building purposes. Many of the well-to-do negroes live in lovely little white coral bungalows and cottages, which for vivid, radiant whiteness would surpass the executive mansion at Washington. Paint can not rival the dazzling lustre of Bermuda's lime-washed coral buildings, shimmering as they do in the brilliant, sub-tropical sunshine like pillars of light.

A Bad Heart, Its Cause And Cure

Many, Firmly Convinced They Are Dying of Heart Trouble, Have Often the Strongest Hearts.

Sometimes you wake up at night, heart throbbing like a steam engine. Your breathing is short and irregular; pains shoot through the chest and abdomen, and cause horrible anxiety.

Your trouble isn't with the heart at all. These sensations are the outcome of indigestion, which has caused gas to form on the stomach and press against the heart.

Just read what happened to Isaac Malloux, of Belle River, Ont.:

"Three months ago I was a weak, sickly man. My appetite was poor, food fermented in my stomach, I had sour risings and indigestion. At night I would often weaken with gas in the stomach and heart palpitation.

"I consulted my doctor and used remedies that my friends advised

NOTHING HELPED.

"One day I received a sample of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and my cure commenced. To-day I have a vigorous appetite, strong heart action and no sign of indigestion. I feel younger and healthier than ever before."

Big Mountain Lion

Maddened when wounded, fighting to the death, and attempting to tear the bodies of his assailants to shreds, a big mountain lion was shot at Half Moone Bay, 50 miles up the coast from Vancouver, B. C., by Thos. Hare, who subsequently collected the bounty on same. Hare, his brother and the latter's wife were passing through the woods, when the lion made his appearance and plunged towards them. Though wounded several times he still came on. Ammunition was running low, but, taking his last aim, Thomas Hare sent a shot through the brute's head as he was making his final spring and it rolled over in the snow dead. When measured it was found to be seven feet from tip to tip.

CARE OF BABY'S MOUTH

Home Remedies May be Resorted to For Several Ailments

The baby's mouth needs constant careful attention. The most common form of sore mouth in little babies is "thrush" or "sprue." Delicate babies are much more susceptible to this disease than healthy babies. The presence of thrush is shown by tiny white specks and threads on the roof and sides of the mouth and on the tongue. Sometimes the inflammation extends through the entire alimentary canal.

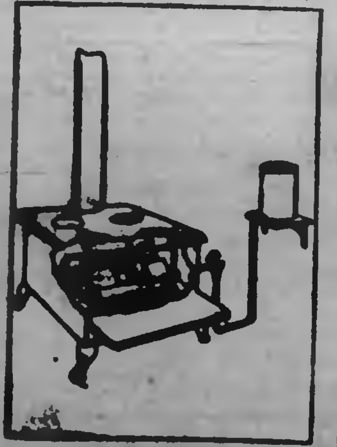
In treating the disease, great care must be taken not to rub the spots or they will bleed. Wash the mouth out with boracic acid solution before and after every meal. Be exceedingly careful of all bottles and nipples. Never put food into a bottle that has not been sterilied with boiling water. Boil the nipple every morning and get new ones frequently. Along with these precautions use this treatment: Wash the mouth out every hour with a solution of bicarbonate of soda, one teaspoonful to a cup of boiled water. To wash out baby's mouth: Wrap a piece of absorbent cotton around the little finger, pour the solution over the swab and wipe out every part of the mouth, taking care not to hurt the sensitive membrane.

Sometimes older babies have ulcerated mouths, caused by poor health or neglected teeth. The symptoms of this disease are drooling at the mouth, bad breath, coated tongue, and inflamed gums. Later yellow spots appear in the mouth and on the gums. Often the gums bleed and the mouth is so sore that the child refuses food. Prompt treatment is necessary. Give the child soft, nourishing food, such as junket, broths, jellied eggs. Wash the mouth out every two hours with a solution of five grains of alum to an ounce of boiled water. If the child is taken to a doctor, he will apply nitrate of silver to the ulcers, but the mother cannot do this herself. Prevention is better than cure, and in this case the prevention is a simple matter. Watch the baby's food, first of all, and then be scrupulously careful to keep everything connected with his feeding perfectly clean.

MAKES GAS IT BURNS

Combined Generator and Burner Takes Place of Coal

An ingenious combination gas generator and burner is shown in the illustration. The gas takes the place of coal for the kitchen range. The apparatus sets in what would be the oven of the stove and on a wall bracket near the range is a reservoir of oil. Through a pipe this oil flows into the generator, which converts it into gas. The gas thus formed spreads through a burner pipe where it can be lighted and it heats up the top of the stove just as if there was a coal fire below. An advantage of this device in a house not provided with a regular gas stove is that it obviates the necessity of keeping a coal fire going all day, as it takes only a little while to heat a stove with it and there is no fuel wasted when no heat is needed, which is an item of economy.



OIL SUPPLIED FROM TANK.

All Sorts of Girdles

Girdles and sashes are becoming daily of greater importance, and every imaginable kind of material is used. Braid manufacturers, embroiderers, ribbon houses and silk and cotton merchants are bringing out special lines of goods for making girdles.

These girdles are worn with simple and with elaborate dresses and on the outside of suit jackets and also wraps.

Curious bead girdles and bead necklaces in the bright Bulgarian colors, are shown.

In handbags glaring colors are seen in the form of ornamentation. These effects, however, are more likely to become popular in buttons and as trimming touches.

SPORTING NEWS

MOTOR-CYCLE

Much interest is being taken in the Canadian championship 15-mile motorcycle race which is being pulled off between Harold Cole and Joe Baribeau.

MOTOR.

It is announced also that there will be an automobile race in which an effort will be made by professional drivers to reduce the half-mile record at the Exhibition. One of the auto polo players holds a world's record.

TENNIS.

Wimbledon, Eng., June 27.—In the third round of the English lawn tennis singles championship, played here today Maurice E. McLaughlin, of San Francisco, beat T. M. Mastrogordate, an English player by three straight sets, 6—4, 6—3, 6—2.

BASEBALL.

Jacksonville, Ind., June 27.—Michael Ruth, 26, died last night of concussion of the brain, the result of being hit on the head with a ball during a baseball game here Sunday. Ruth was at bat when the catcher tried to throw a man out at second base. The ball hit Ruth on the head and he fell unconscious.

THE OAR.

Toronto, June 27.—Though Eddie Durnan has heard no more of the proposed match with R. Greer, at Put-in-Bay, he is training daily in the expectation that efforts to wrest the American sculling championship from him will be made before the expiration of the season.

One day's work this week was a double trip around the Island—about fifteen miles. On his second circuit the fin of his racing shell came in contact with a submerged rock and was badly bent, though not beyond repair.

RING.

Harry Field, who several times competed in the welterweight division at amateur boxing tournaments during the past six years, has met with a tragic end.

He was married a little over a year ago. Within a few months of his marriage his young wife died in the hospital, and Harry seeking to solace his grief, sailed for the old land.

On the trip his misfortune preyed on his mind to such an extent that it gave way, and on reaching Liverpool he was for a time in charge of the authorities, having forgotten his name and destination.

Recovering somewhat, he reached his boyhood's home, but on the anniversary of his wedding day was found dead on the roadside, with a bullet wound in his head.

POLO.

Toronto, June 27.—Mayor Hocken will face the ball at the automobile polo game at the Exhibition track this Saturday afternoon at 3.15. It is expected that this moment will not be the least exciting of his Worship's career, as he will have to step lively after he has given the signal to start, to get out of the way of the two opposing cars who will make a dash for the ball in the centre from their stations at either goal.

Preparations are practically complete for the novel event and there will be a number of special attractions in addition to auto polo, all of which will provide excitement and entertainment.

ATHLETICS.

Toronto, June 27.—The Registration Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union at a meeting last night made some important rulings.

The relay team which performed at the Eaton games and is going after all imaginable records applied for permission to run at the wheelmen's meet at the Beach July 5. It was refused until such time as the trouble between the C.W.A. and the amateur Union is fixed up. The main difficulty is that the C.W.A. allows amateurs and pros. to race at the same meets, though in different events. This is against the spirit of the amateur rules.

NOVICE QUESTION

There has always been doubt on the question of novices. It was settled last night and a novice defined as a man who has never won a first prize.

In conjunction with this the committee divided athletic events into two classes. All runs, including every race from a short sprint to a Marathon and taking in hurdles, constitutes one division. Any first prize taken in any event in these classes lifts a man out of the novice class in all.

The second division is made up of field events—jumps, pole vault and weights. A novice winning in any of these three divisions is still a novice in any of the others and also in any running race.

Across the line a man ceases to be a novice who wins a first, second or third prize.

BOYS' EVENTS

The question has arisen whether a boy becomes ineligible for boys' races after he has won an event in the older classes.

This was answered to the effect that a boy remains eligible for boys' races as long as he is within the age limit prescribed.

MACHINE DISPLACES THE SCRUB WOMAN

A New Invention Spreads Clean Soapy Water, Scrubs up Dirt and Dries Floor in Few Moments

An automatic scrubbing machine has been invented which is claimed to do as good work or even better than a skilled scrubwoman can do on her knees with hot water, soap, brushes and cloths. Little motors run by electricity are placed on wheels and that tanks of hot water and revolving brushes and felt drying cloths are so adjusted that this machine may be run over a floor and the surface thoroughly scrubbed and dried.

This machine is the invention of a New York janitor. It spreads the soapy, clean water, brushes scrub up the dirt, cloths dry the cleaned place and the dirty water is absorbed into another reservoir. The machine may be connected with an electric light fixture after the manner of vacuum cleaners. The motor drives the cleansing brushes at a speed of about 400 revolutions to the minute, and there is an arrangement whereby the pressure of the brushes on the floor may be regulated, bearing down hard over the dirty spots and lighter on the clean places. The scrubber is pushed across the floor as one would push a carpet sweeper or lawn mower, and it does not have to be turned around—the handle is merely swung over. This reverses the pressure on the bristles of the scrubbing brushes and keeps them straight. The inventor claims this is more sanitary than the hand-scrubbing method because it lifts up the dirt and carries it away instead of grinding and rubbing it into the floor. At the same time it looks as though the scrubwoman would still find work to do cleaning out the corners of rooms, the stairways and other such nooks and corners as the machine is too large to work into the corners, where half the dangers from germs are to be found, or to scrub stairs, for obvious reasons.

HANDY CANDY BOX

Separate Compartments Display Every Piece at Once

An Illinois man has designed a candy box which displays each piece of candy when the box is opened. The receptacle is made in three sections, two of them hinged, and each section is divided into two compartments. The middle section is hinged on the lowest section and folds in upon it, a lid closing it so that the contents are not spilled. The top section is hinged to the top of the body of the box and folds in upon the middle section. This also has a lid to keep the contents in. For assorted candies such a box provides good display, as the different kinds of confections may be kept separate. Furthermore, with every sweet in view it is possible for a fastidious woman to select which she likes best without having to burrow down to the bottom of three or four layers.

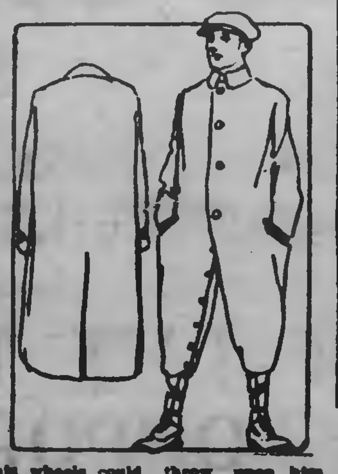
GUARDS HIS CLOTHES

An Old Raincoat Put to Good Use by Motor Cyclist

As collectors of dust and mud motorcyclists are unequalled.

A young man who was rather particular about his clothes, and who disliked to stalk into a hotel after a motorcycle ride covered with all the earth his wheels could throw upon him, found a way out of the difficulty.



He secured an old raincoat, split it up the back almost to his waist and equipped it with snap fasteners on each side so that he could fasten it about his legs when riding.

It doesn't look very nice, but it keeps off the mud and dirt, and does not cost very much either, as the cheapest sort of a raincoat was used.

SKIRT OF HEAVY WORSTED WAIST OF DARK RED CHIFFON

This is the kind of a dress that the girl who used to wear shirt waists is now wearing, and very natty it is.

The skirt is of heavy, mannish worsted—a kind of gray mixture. It is cut peculiarly in a way that draws around the figure at the feet. At one side there is a pleat or tuck running down the entire length of the skirt from hip to foot. From the front around to the other side there is a gored panel put on with large buttons. The waist is of dark red chiffon cloth over heavy white lace. Across the back there is a dark blue velvet collar fastened at the shoulders with tiny buttons to match those on the skirt, and there is a little piping of the same velvet each side of the lace under sleeves that show beneath the chiffon. One original thing about this costume is that the fronts of the kimono waist are cut long enough to tie in a little bow at the top of the high waisted skirt in front, at one side at which is placed one of those little bunches of English field flowers that are omnipresent just now.

Building Extraordinary

A remarkable engineering feat was accomplished recently at a factory in Pennsylvania, when a steel roof weighing 600 tons was lifted from one of the mills to a height of 40 feet above the perpendicular sides of the mill, 35 feet high. This was done in less than four hours. Artisans immediately began to build the sides of the mill to meet the suspended roof, which was held in air, mainly by cables suspended by large steam cranes.

PAULINE JOHNSTON

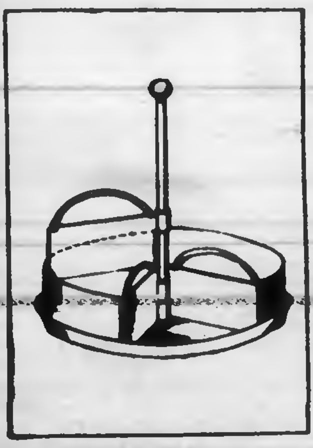
The memory of Pauline Johnston the Indian poetess will always be a sweet fragrance to the people of Canada, white man and Indian. She was the daughter of an Indian chief of the Mohawk tribe, near Brantford, where she was born on March 10, 1862. Pauline Johnston inherited the red man's love of the drama, while her literary tendencies may be ascribed to the family of her English mother, Emily Howells, through whom she was related distantly to William Dean Howells. Miss Howells came from Ohio to the Mohawk Reserve with her sister, the wife of a Church of England missionary, and, meeting the handsome young chief, they fell in love. The little roughcast house in which Pauline Johnson was born still stands, and in the years to come should become a literary shrine for lovers of Canadian poetry. Pauline was carefully educated by private tuition and in the Brantford model school. Early in life she began to write verse, but the world's knowledge of her dates from an evening in 1892, when at the age of thirty she appeared at a literary evening of the Toronto Young Men's Liberal Club, and, along with several other poets, read selections from her own works.

Her best poems, the ones in which there is the greatest life, are those on Indian subjects, canoeing, Canadian scenery, etc. Into her poems of this class, The Death Cry, A Cry from an Indian Wife, As Red Men Die, The Idler, In the Shadows, In April, she has thrown all her heart. They possess an irresistible passion and ardor. Miss Johnson visited England in 1894, and while there published "the White Wampum," a collection of about two-score poems.

NOVEL CHEESE KNIFE

Movable Blades Mounted on Rod That Runs Through Middle

An ingenious method of cutting cheese has been designed by a New York woman. A rod has three broad, movable blades slidably mounted upon it. The cheese—the cutter is designed for use on round cheese, by the way—is placed on a dish and the rod thrust through the center. The three blades, being light in weight, can rest on top of the cheese. When a slice or wedge of cheese is desired it can be cut quickly and accurately by pressing down two of the blades with the requisite width between them. Another advantage of this device, and the probable reason for the third blade, is the fact that it keeps the remainder of the cheese fresh by closing the cuts against the air. The blades are about the depth of the usual round cheese and two of them can be kept pressed against the cuts where the inside is exposed.



KEEPS CHEESE FRESH, TOO.

AVIATOR'S SAFETY HELMET

The frequency of aviation disasters has led to the invention of a number of safety devices for airmen. One which has been highly praised takes the form of a headgear adapted to protect the wearer from shocks or blows, the inventor being a pupil at an English aviation school. In the course of experiment the inventor was belabored over the head with a piece of scantling while he stood passively smiling without feeling the blow in the least. Then, in order to test the device further, it was suggested that he should take a running leap full tilt at one of the hangars. This he did, without injury to himself. The headgear is of leather well padded with horsehair, and contains a system of flat steel springs, which have the effect of distributing the shock sustained by them over a large area.

A KING'S GOLD WATCH

Time-Piece Still Treasured Which Murat Gave to Russian Soldier

In an obituary of a Colonel Tchernosouboff in a Russian provincial paper an extraordinary story is retailed in which is bound up a romatic episode.

Among the colonel's effects was a gold watch, on the case of which was the inscription: "Eléonore à Joachim. Ne m'oublie pas!"

Upon this "Do-not-forget-me" watch hung a tale of the great war. In 1812 the colonel was a simple Cossack, in a regiment engaged in harrying the French retreat; while Murat was King of Naples, and in command of the French cavalry. It was on the eve of Borodino; and Murat, galloping ahead of his squadron, was cut off and surrounded. It looked as though he was doomed.

The range was short and the Cossacks were about to fire, when Tchernosouboff intervened. "Present arms!" he cried chivalrously. "Hurrah for the King of the Brave!" Murat had time to put spurs to his horse, and ride away.

As the King rode off he took out his gold watch, gave it as a souvenir to the Cossack who had saved him. Platoff, the Hetman of the Cossacks, admiring Tchernosouboff's chivalry, gave him his commission, and made him his aide-de-camp.

The watch was thereafter treasured as an heirloom in the Tchernosouboff family, though they received an offer of no less than 20,000 roubles for it.

FREED BY HIS WIFE

Young Canadian Liberated From Prison Owing to His Wife's Efforts

Hugh C. Lyons, of Toronto, convicted of flim-flamming, and sentenced to the Maryland Penitentiary at Baltimore for three years, was given his freedom after serving three months of his sentence, principally because of the devotion displayed by his young wife, who went to Baltimore and finally succeeded in obtaining a review of the case by Judge Elliott. An extraordinary feature of the case which aided Lyons in obtaining liberty was the fact that on the day he was sentenced his father, Philip Lyons, alias Pennavant, was also sentenced, the father and son having been previously captured in a swindle. The elder Lyons was sentenced to three years, and the younger man to two years. Standing in the prisoner's dock, young Lyons pleaded with the judge to transfer the longer term from his father to him.

"Give me the longer term, your Honor," pleaded young Lyons, "I can stand it better than father." The judge granted the plea, and father and son were sent to the penitentiary.

The wife of the younger man went to Baltimore and entered pleas through her course. The case was one of more than ordinary interest, and after much deliberation the judge recalled his sentence on young Lyons who had by that time served three months, and allowed him to go free.

Buttons have such a bad habit of disappearing on each visit to the wash tub! The use of one size and style of button prevents an assorted row, but unfortunately, is just as great a temptation to the wringer to remove a sample of one's dress. This difficulty may be solved by sewing the button to a narrow tape, and making two sets of button holes. As each article returns from the wash, its own row of buttons is slipped into the left hand row of buttonholes, and there is no darning nor sewing on of buttons. The buttons do not become dull and chipped as when washed each week.

The use of the finer designs of embroidery is preferable to lace, which tears so easily.

Bostock the Animal Trainer Allowed no Cruelty to Animals

Mr. Frank Bostock, the well-known menagerie proprietor and lion-tamer, who died at Kensington, England, came of a family of showmen, but it was originally intended that he should take holy orders.

He might have done so but for finding during a school vacation that his father's lion-tamer was cruel. One night, as a result of his cruelty, the tamer almost lost his life. The boy asked permission to take the man's place, but the father peremptorily refused. But next day the father found Frank (he was only fifteen) in the lions' cage. He threatened him with a thrashing if he got out of the cage alive. But instead of the thrashing young Bostock was congratulated on his success and was promoted to the trainer's place. Thereafter he was closely identified with the fortunes of the "jungle" which first bore his father's name and afterwards his own.

Of the many desperate adventures with the wild beasts he sought to tame or train the one that came the nearest to costing him his life was in 1906 at a charity performance at the Paris Hippodrome. He attempted the subjugation of Wallace, a lion which had resisted every effort to tame it, and which during its lifetime killed and injured several people.

Immediately Mr. Bostock entered the cage Wallace pinned him against the bars, bit him severely through the left hand and shoulder, and lashed him with his claws. Wallace also bit him in the back, actually grazing his spinal column with his teeth. Mr. Bostock eventually drove the beast into the arena. Then he was taken to hospital, where he remained for many weeks.

On another occasion a lion, after gripping him through the thigh, picked him up in his mouth and carried him to the lady trainer who also was in the cage, then dropped him and walked away.

The late Mr. Bostock always held that kindness was the best policy in training wild animals, and claimed that no cruelty entered into his methods. Discussing his unruly pupils, he once said:—

"In the case of an attack the fire hose is a good expedient for quelling an infuriated animal. Blank cartridges, too, are very effective. I do not [illegible] not [illegible], as I consider they are cruel and often ineffectual.

"A man who contemplates being a trainer must primarily be a lover of animals, he must possess the patience of Job, and the Alpha and Omega of the whole creed must be kindness."

CANADA MAY HAVE AN AERIAL FLEET

Aeroplanes a Necessity of Modern Warfare Says Two of the Dominion's Highest Officers

As a result of the remarkable demonstration in England of the indispensable part which aeroplanes play in modern warfare it is probable that the Canadian Militia Department will soon add airships to the Dominion's war equipment.

General Mackenzie, Chief of the Canadian General Staff, commenting on the work of the military flyers during the British army manoeuvres, said: "It would appear as though in future warfare the contest would have first to be fought out in the air between the airships and aeroplanes of the opposing forces. The army commander whose air forces conquer the other air forces will have a tremendous advantage, as the new and quick source of information will be cut off from his opponent, while remaining to himself."

He added that the Canadian army organization was following with keen interest all that pertained to the use of aeroplanes in war, and a monthly bulletin was received on this subject and its information was filed away. However, as to the actual purchase of aeroplanes, that was a question for the future. The Canadian army needed many things, and there was a question as to just when aeroplanes would become necessary.

Brigadier-General Lessard, Adjt.-General of the Canadian forces agreed with General Mackenzie that the use of aeroplanes so assisted the work of the manoeuvring armies that a day's time was gained. Gen. Lessard concluded by saying that the Turko-Italian war showed the importance and value of the aeroplane in war. In future battles all armies would have to have a force of airships and aeroplanes. There would likely meet first, and the meeting of them would be a rather terrible affair.

MAKING BOGUS BILLS

Canadians Are Well Protected But Counterfeiters Are Often Clever

There are many obstacles in the way of the counterfeiter of Canadian bank notes or government bills, according to the statement of a former employe of the American Bank Note Co., the firm which manufactures Canada's paper money. First of all the counterfeiter has much trouble in securing paper which will prove a good substitute for the paper used by the government. His next greatest obstacle, and the greatest of all, is to secure ink similar to that used by the government. The paper used by the government is made at Dalton, Mass., by a secret process. It contains the familiar silk thread. Several counterfeiters had baffled, to a certain extent, the authorities by using a high grade of onion paper. Two sheets were used. The silk threads were placed between and the sheets glued together. As to the ink, the government uses a very expensive kind and when anyone other than a government employee or some bank note company makes a purchase it is very easy for the detectives to trace it. It is easier to trace the purchase of ink than paper, as many corporations use the high grade onion paper for letter heads, etc.

In the case of the counterfeit bills which have been circulated in large numbers, apparently from Hamilton, a good bill was photographed and a copper plate made. A plate was made for each side of the bill. The bill gives the impression that it has been soiled on the back, except around the edges, which showed that the plate was none too good and not made by an expert, the clean edges leading to detection at once.

The best bogus bills are made by the lithographic, or steel plate system. However, a man may be expert at the engraving business, and still be unable to make a duplicate on the geometrical lathe, which is the machine used in making bank bill plates. The expert may make a very strong resemblance of the original, but there will be a difference and one used to the business could detect it.

The Man Who Gave All His Money Away

Dr. Daniel Kimball Pearsons, of Chicago, the man who gave nearly $5,000,000 to education, and died practically penniless, was one of the most remarkable philanthropists of the age. His gifts were small in comparison with those of some other millionaires, but they were large in proportion to his means. They were veritably the "widow's mite," inasmuch as he gave all he had. His last days were spent in a sanitarium where he had lived for some years, having divested himself of all his fortune, and receiving $5,000 per annum by one of the colleges which he had benefited. Out of this income Dr. Pearsons was able to save enough to continue his benefactions, and probably gave away more than half of it in the course of a year. A few days before his death he celebrated his 92nd birthday, and to the newspaper men who interviewed him, he declared that he was perfectly happy, and that his only regret was that he hadn't been able to distribute $10,000,000 instead of $5,000,000. Dr. Pearsons' wife died in 1908. He had no children, and his immediate relatives are well-to-do. He felt that he could give away every dollar he owned without doing any wrong to those who had a better claim upon him, and in giving he found a delight that was not surpassed by the satisfaction of those to whom he gave.

FEEDING AT THE ZOO

Monkeys Require the Most Varied Diet of all Animals Kept in Captivity

It costs about one hundred dollars a week to feed the animals at Riverdale Zoo, Toronto, though none of them have more than two meals daily, and the large cat family only one.

To feed the animals and birds each day, one hundred pounds of meat, one hundred and fifty pounds of bread, eighteen pounds of fish, twelve pounds dogs biscuits, bananas, apples potatoes, carrots, rice, nuts, bird seed, corn, make up the daily bill of fare.

Bullock's liver is fed to the lions once each week. The blood contained in the liver is said to be good medicine for them.

The elephant makes a light lunch of about ten or twelve pounds of bread and nearly as much hay, the whole meal being put away in short time.

Bread is the staple diet of the bears, who are responsible for the disappearance of the greater part of the daily supply.

The polar bears are aided by the pelicans, storks and bald-headed eagles in demolishing the lake herring and whitefish.

The monkeys have the most varied diet, one which includes such dishes as boiled milk, bread and milk, boiled potatoes and carrots.

Rather less food is need 1 in winter than in summer, because many of the animals "den up" for days at a time.

The feeding of the animals is a magnet for visitors who throng the Zoo each afternoon.

The monkeys daintily picking choice bits, are always assured of a large audience, as are the polar bears and fish-eating birds.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

CHAPTER VII—Edith detains Thorne while the prisoner is sent for. An order comes from General Varney for Wilfred to report to the front at once.

CHAPTER VIII—Edith is forced to carry out her part in the test of Thorne. She gives him the message taken from Jonas, which he reads without betraying himself. He suspects that he is being watched.

CHAPTER IX—The prisoner is thrust into the room alone with Thorne, who recognizes him as his elder brother, Henry Dumont. They put up a sham fight. Henry implores his brother to shoot him in the leg. Thorne refuses and Henry accidentally kills himself. Arrelsford rushes into the room with the guard. Thorne nonchalantly says: "Corporal, here is your prisoner, we had a fight and I shot him."

CHAPTER X—Caroline goes to the war department telegraph office to send a message.

CHAPTER XI—Arrelsford refuses to let Caroline's message go through. It is a telegram to Wilfred simply asking forgiveness, but Arrelsford suspects a double meaning. He and Edith secrete themselves to watch Thorne, whose arrival Arrelsford expects.

CHAPTER XII—Thorne takes charge of the telegraph office and after satisfying himself that he is alone attempts to send a message, but is interrupted by the arrival of a messenger from the secretary of war with a dispatch.

CHAPTER XIII—Arrelsford and Edith see Thorne after the secretary's dispatch. Thorne is shot in the wrist by Arrelsford when he attempts to send it. Arrelsford calls the guard and when they appear Thorne turns the tables by ordering the arrest of Arrelsford.

CHAPTER XIV—The removal of Arrelsford is stopped by the arrival of General Randolph. Thorne again begins sending the dispatch. Arrelsford protests declaring Thorne is sending a forged order to weaken the lines of defense. Randolph demands upon what authority Thorne has assumed command of the telegraph office. Miss Varney appears.

CHAPTER XV—She produces Thorne's commission as major in command of the government telegraph. She, having seen enough to convince her he is a spy, begs him not to send the forged order. After she leaves he tears it up.

CHAPTER XVI—Thorne plans to escape from Richmond.

CHAPTER XVII—Arrelsford calls at the Varney home and demands to see Edith. Mrs. Varney refuses. A sergeant appears with an order to search the house for Thorne. Wilfred Varney returns from the front wounded.

We're looking for some one else. Put him back in his closet. Here, this room! Be quick now! Cover that door. Sorry to disturb you, ma'am."

"Do what you please," said Mrs. Varney; "I have nothing on earth to conceal."

As the men hurriedly withdrew to continue their search, the voice of a newcomer was heard on the porch. The words came to them clearly:

"Here, lend a hand, somebody, will you?"

The next moment General Varney's orderly entered the room, caught sight of the sergeant, saluted, and then turned to Mrs. Varney.

"I've brought back your boy, ma'am," he said.

"Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. Varney faintly; "what do you mean—"

"We never got out to General Varney's. We ran into a Yankee raiding party, cavalry, down here about three miles. Our home-guard was galloping by on the run to head them off, and before I knew what he was about, the boy was in with 'em, riding like mad. There was a bit of a skirmish, and he got a clip across the neck. Nothing at all ma'am. He rode back all the way, and—"

"Oh, my boy! He's hurt—he's hurt—"

"Nothing serious, ma'am; don't upset yourself," returned the orderly reassuringly.

"Where did you—"

But that moment the object of their solicitude himself appeared on the scene. The boy was very pale, and his neck was bandaged. Two of the sergeant's men supported him.

"Oh, Wilfred!" cried his mother; "my boy!"

"It's nothing, mother," said Wilfred, motioning her away. "You don't understand." The boy tried to free himself from the men who still held him by the arm. "What do you want to hold me like that for?" he expostulated, as he drew himself away and took a few steps. "You see I can walk," he protested.

His words were brave, but his performance was weak. His mother came close to him and extended her arms toward him. But Wilfred was a soldier now, and he did not want any scenes. Therefore, with a great effort, he took her hand in as casual a manner as possible, quite like a stranger paying an afternoon call.

"How do you do, mother?" he said. "You didn't expect me back so soon, did you? I will tell you how it was. Don't you go away, orderly. I will just rest a minute, and then I will go back with you." Another outburst of the cannon and the frantic pealing of the alarm bells caught his attention. "See, they are ringing the bells calling out the reserves." He started toward the door. "I will go right now."

"No, no, Wilfred," said his mother, taking his arm; "not now, my son."

"Not now?" said Wilfred, whose weakness was growing apparent. "Do you hear those—those—those bells and—then tell me not—to go—why—"

He swayed and tottered.

"Stand by there!" cried the sergeant.

The two men immediately caught hold of him as he fainted. They carried him to the lounge.

"Find some water, will you?" continued the sergeant. "Put his head down, ma'am, and he'll be all right in a minute. He's only fainted."

One of the privates who had hurried off in search of water soon came back with a basin full, with which Mrs. Varney laved the boy's head.

"He'll be all right in a minute," said the sergeant. "Come, men."

He turned as he spoke, and, followed by the men, left the room, leaving Mrs. Varney with Wilfred and the orderly. It was the latter who broke the silence.

"If there isn't anything else, ma'am, I believe I'd better report back to the general."

"Yes," said Mrs. Varney, "don't wait. The wound is dressed, isn't it?"

"Yes; I took him to the Windsor hospital. They said he would be on his feet in a day or two, but he wants to be kept pretty quiet."

"Tell the general how it happened."

"Very well, ma'am," said the orderly, touching his cap and going out.

The next person to enter the room was Caroline Mitford. The noise of the men searching the house was very plain. Having informed Edith of the meaning of the tumult, she had come downstairs to inquire if they had found Thorne. She came slowly within the door—rather listlessly, in fact. The exciting events of the night in which she had taken part had somewhat sapped her natural vivacity, but she was shocked into instant action when she saw Wilfred stretched upon the sofa.

"Oh!" she breathed in a low, tense whisper; "what is it? Is he—"

"Caroline dear," said Mrs. Varney, "it is nothing serious. He isn't badly hurt. He was cut in the neck and fainted. There, there—" the woman rose from Wilfred's side and caught the girl—"don't you faint, too, dear."

"I am not going to faint," said Caroline desperately. She took Mrs. Varney's handkerchief from the latter's hand, and dipped it in the water. "I can take care of him," she continued, kneeling down by her boyish lover. "I don't need anybody down here at all. The men are going all over the house and—"

"But, Caroline—" began Mrs. Varney.

"Mrs. Varney," returned the girl, strangely quiet, "there's a heap of soldiers upstairs, looking in all the rooms. I reckon you'd better go and attend to them. They will be in Edith's room, or Howard's, in a minute."

"Yes, yes," said Mrs. Varney, "and Howard so ill. I must go for a few minutes, anyway. You know what to do?"

"Oh, yes," answered the girl confidently.

"Bathe his forehead. He isn't badly hurt, dear. I won't be long, and he will soon come to, I am sure," said Mrs. Varney, hastening away.

Presently Wilfred opened his eyes. He stared about him unmeaningly and uncomprehendingly for the moment.

"Wilfred, dear Wilfred," began the girl in soft, low, caressing tones, "you are not hurt much, are you? Oh, not much. There, you will feel better in just a moment, dear Wilfred."

"Is there—are you—?" questioned Wilfred, striving to concentrate his mind on the problem of his whereabouts and her presence.

"Oh, Wilfred, don't you know me?"

"What are you talking about?" said Wilfred more strongly. "Of course I know you. Where am I?" And as full consciousness came back to him, "What am I doing, anyway? Taking a bath?"

"No, no, Wilfred; you see I am bathing your head. You fainted a little, and—"

"Fainted!" exclaimed Wilfred in deep disgust. "I fainted?" He made a feeble attempt to rise, but sank back weakly. "Yes, of course, I was in a fight with the Yankees and got wounded somewhere."

He stopped, puzzled, staring strangely, almost afraid, at Caroline.

"What is it?" asked the girl.

"Oh, Wilfred, Don't You Know Me?"

"See here," he began seriously; "I will tell you one thing right now. I am not going to load you up with a cripple, not much."

His resignation was wonderful.

"Cripple!" exclaimed Caroline, bewildered.

"I reckon I've got an arm knocked off, haven't I?"

"No, you haven't, Wilfred; they are both on all right."

"Perhaps it was a hand that they shot away?"

"Not a single one," said Caroline.

"Are my—my ears on all right?"

"Yes," answered the girl. "You needn't bother about them for a moment."

Wilfred staked all on the last question.

"How many legs have I got left?"

"All of them," answered Caroline; "every one!"

"Then, if there's enough of me left to—to amount to anything—you'll take charge of it, just the same? How about that?"

"That's all right," said the girl, burying her face on his shoulder.

Wilfred got hold of her hand and kissed it passionately. He seemed quite strong enough for that.

"I tried to send you a telegram but they wouldn't let me," whispered Caroline suddenly, raising her head and looking at him.

"You did?"

"Yes."

"What did you say in it?"

But here the girl's courage failed her.

"Tell me what you said," persisted Wilfred.

"It was something very nice," faltered poor Caroline.

"It was, eh?"

"Yes."

"Was it as nice as this?" asked Wilfred, suddenly lifting his head and kissing her.

"I don't know about that," stammered Caroline, blushing a beautiful crimson, "but it was very nice. I wouldn't have tried to telegraph it if it was something bad, would I?"

"Well, if it was so good," said Wilfred, "why on earth didn't you send it?"

"Goodness gracious!" exclaimed Caroline; "how could I when they wouldn't let me?"

"Wouldn't let you?"

"I should think not. They had a dreadful time at the telegraph office."

"At the telegraph office; were you there?" Wilfred made a violent effort to recollect. "I have it," he said in stronger tones; "they told me at the hospital. I must get up."

"No, no; you mustn't," said Caroline, interposing.

"Don't," said Wilfred; "I have to attend to it." He spoke with a stern, strange decision, entirely foreign to his previous idle love-making. "I know all about Thorne. He gets hold of our department telegraph and sends out a false order, weakens our defenses at Cemetery Hill." The boy got to his feet by this time, steadying himself by Caroline's shoulder. "They are down on us in a moment." A look of pain, not physical, shot across his face, but he mastered it. "And she gave it to him, the commission; my sister Edith!" he continued bitterly.

"Oh!" said Caroline; "you know—"

"I know this. If my father were here, he'd see her. As he isn't here, I will attend to it. Send her to me."

He spoke weakly, but in a clear voice and a most imperative manner. He took his hand off Caroline's shoulder. If he were to deal with this, so grave and critical a situation, he must do it without feminine support. By a great effort he held himself resolutely erect, repeating his command.

"Send her to me."

"No," said Caroline faintly, just as Mrs. Varney re-entered the room.

"What is it?" asked the mother.

"He wants to see Edith," returned the girl.

"Not now, Wilfred," persisted Mrs. Varney; "you are weak and ill, and Edith—"

"Tell her to come here, I must see her at once," repeated Wilfred.

Mrs. Varney instantly divined the reason. Caroline had told him about the telegraph office, but she could see no advantage to be gained by the interview he sought.

"I won't do you any good, Wilfred," she said. "She won't speak a word to anybody about it."

"I don't want her to speak to me," returned the boy grimly; "I am going to speak to her."

"But some other time, Wilfred," urged his mother.

"No, no; immediately," but as no one made the slightest effort toward complying with his demand, "Very well," he continued, moving slowly toward the door, and by a determined effort keeping his feet. "If you won't send her to me, I will—"

"There, there," said Mrs. Varney, interposing swiftly; "if you must, you must. Since you insist, I will call her."

"I do insist."

"Stay with him, dear," said Mrs. Varney to Caroline, "and I will go and call her."

"No," said Wilfred, "I want to see her alone."

Wondering much at this move of her boy-lover, but somehow feeling that Wilfred represented his father and the law, Caroline, after one long look at his pale but composed face, turned and followed Mrs. Varney out of the room.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Captain Thorne Justifies Himself.

After the two women had left him, Wilfred stood motionless for a moment, and then sat wearily down to rest. Scarcely had he done so when he heard shouts far outside in the street, the heavy trampling of feet, cries, directions, orders. He rose and walked over to the window. The cries were growing louder and the footsteps more distinct. Men were approaching the house rapidly, he could tell that they were running. What could they be? What was toward? A suspicion flashed into his mind. It had hardly found lodgment there when Thorne sprang upon the porch, leaped across it, and burst through the other front window into the long room. A pedestal with a bust of Washington on it was standing between the windows. As Thorne sprang back from the window, he knocked against it. It fell to the floor with a tremendous crash.

He stood staring a moment toward the window, listening while the noise of the running feet died away in the distance. It seemed that he had distanced his pursuers or eluded them for the time being. It could only be for a moment, however; he had other things to think of. Well, that moment would be enough; it was all he required. He turned to go down the room, only to find himself confronted by the boy.

It is hard to say which was the more surprised of the two—Thorne at seeing Wilfred, or Wilfred at Thorne's appearance. The latter's face was pale, his breath was coming rapidly, he was bareheaded. His brow was covered with sweat, and he had the hunted, desperate look of a man at the very end of his resources. Neither at first said anything to the other. It was Thorne who first recovered himself. He sought to pass by the boy, but Wilfred seized him.

"Halt!" he cried; "you are under arrest."

"Wait a moment!" gasped out Thorne; "and I will go with you."

As he spoke he shook himself loose from the weak grasp of the wounded young man, and started down the room.

"Halt, I say!" cried Wilfred. "You are my prisoner."

"All right, all right," said Thorne quietly; "your prisoner, anything you like. Here—" he drew his revolver from his pocket and pushed it into the boy's hand; "take this, shoot the life out of me, if you wish, but give me a chance to see my brother first."

"Your brother?"

"Yes. He was shot here tonight. I want one look at his face; that's all."

"Where is he?"

"Maybe they put him in the room across the hall yonder."

"What would he be doing there?" asked Wilfred, not yet apprehending the situation from Thorne's remarks.

"Nothing," said the other bitterly; "I guess he is dead."

"Wait," said Wilfred. He stepped across the hall, keeping Thorne covered with his revolver. "Don't move; I will see." He threw open the door, glanced in, and then came back. "It's a lie!" he said.

"What!" exclaimed Thorne.

"There is no one in there. It is just one of your tricks. Call the guard!" He shouted toward the hall, and then toward the window. "Sergeant of the guard! Captain Thorne is here, in this house."

He stepped out on the porch and shouted again with astonishing power for one so painfully wounded as he. Then the boy felt a faintness come over him. He sank down on a seat on the porch and leaned his head against the house, and sought to recover his strength, fighting a desperate battle, fearful lest Thorne should escape while he was thus helpless.

It was Edith Varney who first replied to his frantic summons by hurrying into the room. She was as much surprised to see Thorne as he was to see her. Her heart leaped in her bosom at the sight of him, and she stared at him as at a wraith or a vision.

"You wouldn't tell me an untruth, would you?" said Thorne, coming closer to her. "He was shot in this room an hour ago, my brother Henry. I'd like to take one look at his dead face before they send me the same way. Where is he? Can't you tell me that much, Miss Varney? Is he in the house?"

Edith looked at his face, shook her head a little, and moved away from him toward the table. Thorne threw up his hands in a gesture of despair, and turned toward the window. As he did so, Wilfred, having recovered from his faintness a little, called out again:

"The guard! The escaped prisoner, Captain Thorne!"

This time his frantic outcry was answered. At last they were closing in upon the wretched man. He turned from the window and faced the girl, scarcely less wretched than he, and laughed shortly.

"They are on the scent, you see," he said; "they'll get me in a minute; and when they do, it won't take them long to finish me off. And as that'll be the last of me, Miss Varney, maybe you'll listen to one thing. We can't all die a soldier's death, in the roar and glory of battle, our friends about us, under the flag we love. No, not all! Some of us have orders for another kind of work, dare-devil, desperate work, the hazardous schemes of the secret service. We fight our battles alone, no comrades to cheer us on, ten thousand to one against us, death at every turn. If we win, we escape with our lives; if we lose, we are dragged out and butchered like dogs. No soldier's grave, not even a trench with the rest of the boys—alone, despised, forgotten! These were my orders, Miss Varney; this is the death I die tonight, and I don't want you to think for one moment that I am ashamed of it; no, not for one moment."

The sound of heavy feet drew nearer. Wilfred called again, while the two in the room confronted each other, the man erect, and the woman, too. A strange pain was in her heart. At last there was a man, but before she could say a word in answer to his impassioned defense, the room filled with soldiers.

New Treatment Now Advocated For Bronchitis

Is Having Wonderful Success, and is Making Most Remarkable Cures

For bronchitis a different form of treatment is now advocated. It consists of a scientifically devised vapor that penetrates to the uttermost recesses of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Every spot that is sore, every surface that is irritated is at once bathed with soothing balsams and healing essences that make chronic bronchitis an impossibility.

This treatment now so universally employed in bronchitis, throat troubles, colds, etc., is called CATARRHOZONE. It acts just as air of the pine woods acts, as a healing antiseptic remedy for all diseases of the breathing organs.

Just think of it—a remedy that can be carried with the very air you breathe to the seat of bronchial or catarrhal inflammation. A remedy powerful enough to kill germ life and yet so healing that disease flees before it. Catarrhozone is truly a wonderful remedy. In many lands it has lands it has won its way, and is affording grand results to sufferers from colds, catarrh, throat weakness, asthma and bronchitis. There is no sufferer from a grippy cold or any winter ill, that won't find a cure in Catarrhozone, which is employed by physicians, ministers, lawyers and public men throughout many foreign lands. Large size lasts two months and costs $1.00 and is guaranteed; small size 50c., sample size, 25c., all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

CLEANING THE TEETH

The right way to brush teeth is to work the brush down from the gums to the teeth. The old way of rubbing the brush crosswise of the teeth is likely to cause recession of the gums. Some dentists claim that it leads eventually to Riggs disease.

To brush the teeth properly is a more tedious process than the common way, but it insures the welfare of both gums and teeth. Put the brush on the gums and brush toward the teeth and off their points. Thus the bristles serve to stimulate the gums and keep them in place as well as to clean the surfaces of the teeth. The surfaces of the molars may be cleaned in the ordinary way by a back and forth motion of the brush.

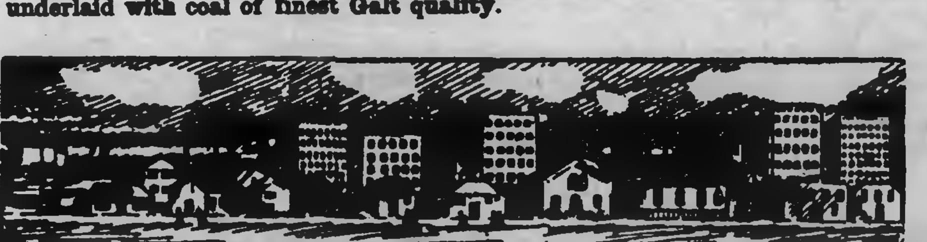
Carmangay

"The Star of Alberta"

PAST The splendidly strategic site of Carmangay was discovered by a far seeing, shrewd railway engineer attracted to the district by the lure of the finest wheat in the Canadian West. He snapped up lands where the wide canyons of the Little Bow River narrows to a point. Here must all railways cross. The C. P. R. came and the shipping centre created went ahead by leaps and bounds.

PRESENT Carmangay today is a thriving incorporated town, with not less than 53 business places. Her up-to-date electric and natural water supply systems are owned and operated by the people. Carmangay boasts an eight-roomed schoolhouse, two banks and four big elevators, shipping over a million bushels in 1911 and 1½ millions in 1912. Carmangay has coal mines operating, and the entire district is underlaid with coal of finest Galt quality.



FUTURE Carmangay grows as Alberta grows. That means a wonderful future. Four new railroads are heading for Carmangay. Four new elevators are trying to cope with the tremendous wheat yields of the district. The mines are opening up splendid prospects. Carmangay is being rapidly developed into one of the greatest towns in the Canadian West. YOU can just as confidently invest in Carmangay as her own people do, who are building in brick and stone for a tremendous future. Carmangay has her own supply of finest brick clay and stone right at her doors, and will soon supply her sister cities in Alberta.

LIBERALS WILL CARRY ON A CAMPAIGN DURING SUMMER

Ex Ministers to Stump Canada Against Borden Naval Policy

(Special to The Times)

Ottawa, June 28.—The humiliating defeat of the Liberal plot to force another general election upon the country of the irresponsible act of the Liberal faction in the Senate does not seem to have taught the necessary lesson to the men who did their best to prevent the Dominion from doing her duty to the mother country. Members who were conspicuously active in the blockade of the Naval Bill at Ottawa, and ex-members who were equally conspicuous in promoting the blockade from outside of the House, are now going up and down the country endeavoring by the grossest misrepresentations to win back to the party those Liberals who became disgusted with the tactics of the Liberal leaders during the recent session. All that remains is for Pugsley, the arch-obstructionist, to take the field and the spectacle will be complete. Mc Mackenzie King is as busy in Ontario as he can be, and he has lots of leisure in which to do it.

MISREPRESENT BORDEE'S POSITION.

The methods followed are those to which the country became familiar during the fight at Ottawa. The proposal by which the Government intends to meet the existing imperial situation, on behalf of Canada, is being spoken of and criticized as a permanent policy. Everybody knows that it is not a permanent policy, that the permanent policy is to come in due time, and that before it is acted upon, the people of Canada, in accordance with the promise of the Prime Minister will have a chance to consider and pronounce it. Mr. Borden at no time said that the proposal to immediately strengthen the naval forces of the Empire by a gift of ships, would be submitted to the people. Liberal speakers are misrepresenting his position in this as in all other respects.

STIRRING UP FEELING

The effort of the campaign now being waged is to stir up a feeling in Canada against the Mother Country. It is being made by the men who welcome as one of their number the member who during the blockade of the Naval Bill read the American declaration in Independence on the floor of Parliament. "We want no great navy in this country," said Hugh Guthrie at Walkerton, speak(-ing the mind of his Liberal associates The Laurier party wants no navy in Canada.

What is the effect of this campaign? Here is how the Toronto Globe joyfully quotes an anonymous interrupter at a Liberal gathering in York country. "Ijll vote against Dreadnoughts because there is too much Downin- street." That's the spirit which the Liberal campaigners would create all over over Canada if they could.

PURE RACIAL APPEAL.

What then? There was a Liberal meeting at Walkerton, in the riding of South Bruce, addressed by Hugh Guthrie of South Wellington. Mr. Guthrie gave this meeting the usual blockers' version of the naval situation. The meeting passed a resolution bearing bearing all the ear marks of having been prepared outside the riding, and containing this objection to the Government's naval proposal, "because the defence of the policy has disclosed the fact that the war vessels to be built with Canadian money were designed for the North Sea, and this singling out of Germany and the attack made upon the German people by responsible ministers of the Borden Government, is an effront to Canadian citizens of German race."

Sounds familiar doesn't it? It is an echo of the desperate appeal made by Hon. Mackenzie King to the electors of North Waterloo in the last general election. That appeal was an outrage upon the citizenship of the men to whom it was made, and they resented it by defeating Mackenzie King at the polls and by electing a man who, a Canadian of German descent, supports the Borden naval proposal. The man who made that appeal in North Waterloo dares not appear again as a Liberal candidate in the constituency. But the appeal is still being made. It will be resented by Canadians of whatever descent as it was resented by the people of North Waterloo.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S POLICIES MAY YET HASTEN UPHEAVAL

Reducing the Tariff and Reforming the Currency Will Add to the National Wealth

Washington, June 28.—Far-seeing men are asking whether the progressive legislation now being pushed through congress by President Wilson will delay or hasten the coming revolution.

Reducing the tariff and reforming the currency are steps in the right direction, and they will tend to conserve and increase the wealth of the nation. So far, so good; the United States is the richest country in the world, and may become richer by having a less burdensome tariff and a less contracted currency. But the spirit of unrest, which bid fair to make Theodore Roosevelt president, and seemed to threaten the country with the alternative of revolution, has by no means passed away. It was generated not by the belief that the nation lacked wealth, but by the conviction that the wealth was not fairly distributed among the people who produced it. The complaint against the tariff was not so much that it made prices high for the consumer, or it made possible enormous profits for the manufacturer, but that it protected the employer without protecting the employe from competition, and put all the profits into the bank account of the manufacturer, and none of it into the pay envelopes of the men.

The Tariff Bill.

The tariff bill is now before the Democratic caucus of the senate which is holding three sessions a day and the bill as reported from the finance committee, should soon make its appearance on the floor of the senate. Free sugar and free wool are safely passed. Free wheat, free flour, free cattle and free meats will be found in the bill when it goes to the President. Free sugar was helped to a great extent by the exposure respecting the lobby, and free wool by the facts brought to light in the strike at the woolen mills of Lawrence, Mass.

OUR NEW SERIAL BEGINS THIS WEEK

The attention of our readers is called to the first installment of our grand new serial story, which will appear in a few days. The new story is entitled "A Tenderfoot's Wooing," by Clive Phillipps Wooley, author of Gold, Gold, in Cariboo, etc. The scene of this drama, told in book form, is laid in British Columbia, and the story is most thrilling in its interest.

57TH REGIMENT HAS GONE TO CAMP

On Saturday afternoon, the gallant boys of the 57th Regiment, left about full strength for Kingston.

The camp this year will be entirely different from and more advanced than any previous one. The regiment left the train near Kingston, and march a certain distance every day, returning on Wednesday. Another part of the 3rd Division which includes Ottawa, Brockville, Kingston and Belleville, will detrain some miles from the local regiment-s destination. The two "armies" will work toward each other, finally meeting in a grand sham battle on Tuesday morning. The regiment will not use tents, but will bivouack, using blankets every night.

The Rangers wore "cow-breakfast" straw hats with one side looped up.

BOTH GAINED.

Man and Wife Fatten on Grape-Nuts

The notion that meat is necessary for real strength and the foundation of solid flesh is now no longer so prevalent as formerly.

Excessive meat eaters are usually sluggish a part of the time because they are not able to fully digest their food, and the undigested portion is changed into what is practically a kind of poison that acts upon the blood and nerves, thus getting all through the system.

"I was a heavy meat eater," writes a Western man, "and up to two years ago, was in very poor health. I suffered with indigestion so that I only weighed 95 pounds

"Then I heard about Grape-Nuts food and decided to try it. My wife laughed at me at first, but when I gained to 125 pounds and felt so fine, she thought she would eat Grape Nuts to. "Now she is far and well and has gained 40 pounds. We never have indigestion any more and seldom feel the desire for meat.

A neighbor of ours, 68 years old, was troubled with indigestion for years, and was a heavy meat eater. Now since he has been eating Grape-Nuts regularly, he says he is well and never has indigestion.

I could name a lot of persons who have rid themselves of indigestion by changing from a heavy meat diet to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

HEALEY ACQUITTED ON CHARGE OF HORSE THEFT

Charles Healey appeared before His Honor Judge Huycke in the County Court on Saturday morning. The charge registered against the prisoner was one of horse stealing. Crown Attorney Wood conducted the case for the crown and Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared on behalf of the prisoner. The first witness called was Charles Fife, the man from whom Healey is alleged to have stolen the horse. As his evidence and that of other witnesses has already been given in the Times, following the preliminary hearing, it is omitted.

After all the evidence was in. His Honor acquitted the prisoner and remarked that he was disgusted with both parties concerned.

A LOCAL DOCTOR FELL INTO THE LAKE

This is an absolutely true story of a well known local doctor. One day last week, it does not do to be too specific where personalities are involved. This disciple of Esculapius was gazing at work on construction of the new Little Lake Cemetery gates. Now, whether this local medico was considering how much to charge for an appendicitis operation, or deciding whether Dr. Friedmann's turtle serum is beneficial, is not known. Any how, the doctor backed off the cement pier and fell into the wet water of Little Lake and his nice grey suit now fits him closer than clamshells round a basball mitt.

New Brunswick's share in the Dominion Government's agriculture aid grant has been fixed at $64,117.

AMERICAN WOMEN ARE DIVIDED ON HOW THEY SHOULD RIDE

American Women Divided on The Riding Question, Many Admit the Old Way the More Graceful, But the New Way is Safer

Washington, June 28.—American women are divided on the question precipitated by King George, as to whether they should ride a horse astride or with a side-saddle.

Prominent women questioned here admit opposition to riding astride, but there are many who would hardly think now of riding the old way.

The daughters of President Wilson have different views on the question. Miss Margaret Wilson rides side-saddle, while Miss Jessie and Miss Eleanor Wilson ride astride.

Mrs. Thos. R. Marshall, wife of the Vice-President, sides with King George, admitting her preference for the side-saddle. "If I were to take up horse-back riding, I certainly should ride side-saddle. It is much more graceful," she said.

Miss Katherine Elkins, who never has been astride a horse in her life, boasts of that fact.

Miss Helen Buchanan, daubhter of Brigadier-General J. A. Buchanan, retired, who is a great horsewoman and never misses a horse show, is a devotee of the side-saddle.

Mrs. Daniels, wife of the secretary of the Navy, although she does not hide herself, is strongly in favor of cross-saddle as the safer method.

Mrs. Bryan, wife of the Secretary of State, believes the cross-saddle is the only natural way to ride, safer, and, in consequence, much more attractive to look upon.

REV. MR. COUCH BIDS CONGREGATION ADIEU

Rev. Mr. Couch, of the George street Methodist church, preached his final sermon last night as pastor of that church, to a large congregation. The text was Revelations 1st Chap 5th and 6th verses:

"And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the Kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed from our sins in his own blood.

And has made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory, and dominion for ever and ever."

The sermon was most elevating and eloquent. Towards its close, Mr. Couch who leaves for his new field of action this week, bid his flock farewell and expressed a hope that they would prosper in the future as they had done in the past.

In his departure Peterborough loses a respected citizen, the George street church loses a revered pastor and the Ministerial Association loses a beloved official. All concerned will wish Mr. Couch every prosperity in his new pastorate.

WALL COLLAPSED BURYING FIFTEEN

Cleveland, June 28.— A portion of the wall and scaffoldinb being used in adding a second story to the Eculid square garage on East Thirteenth street, near Eculid avenue, collapsed shortly before noon today burying fifteen workmen in the debris. Five were immediately taken out badly injured, and rushed to a hospital.

TRENTON GIRL COPIES THE SUFFRAGETT HUNGER STRIKE

Trenton, June 28.—Practising the tactics of the London militant suffragettes, Margaret Ditchfield, a young woman sent to the county jail for three months, has starved herself for four days and is now so weak she is receiving medical attention in the jail. She probably will have to be removed to a hospital.

The girl has all along maintained her innocence of the wrong-doing for which she is imprisoned, and says she will die rather than remain an unnecessary hour in jail. Despite the efforts of the warden and his assistants, who have treated the girl kindly, she maintains her hunger strike and refuses all food.

Physicians who have examined Miss Ditchfield, says she cannot keep up the strike much longer without doing serious harm to herself. It has been suggested to the warden to try forcible feeding, but he says he will resign first.

The Ditchfield girl, together with Catherine Amberg and three actors, were arrested for disorderly conduct. The actors were fined and allowed to go, but the girls were sent to jail for three months. Since her confinement to the jail the Amberg girl has told the authorities what happened the night of their arrest. Her confession exonerates the Ditchfield girl of the charge against her.

An effort is being made to have the girl released on probation.

CHICAGO WAS SIZZLING AND DULUTH SUFFERS WITH COLD

Chicago, June 28.—After sweltering, throughout the night, Chicago found itself confronted by another day of intense heat and suffering. The weather forecaster declares that there is no relief in sight. Clear skies and a hot breeze from the west added to the city's discomfort.

Charity organizations distributed tons of ice free in the tenement districts to-day, every public bathing beach was crowded, and several hundred thousand persons fled to summer resorts in Michigan and Wisconsin.

The official temperature at 9 a.m. was 88, and numerous prostrations had been reported.

Duluth, Minn., June 28.—Smoke rolling from big building smokestacks spoke eloquently of a resumption of steam heating here early today—the coldest June in 28 years. Street thermometers registered as low as 42 degrees at 6 a.m., but warmed up to 45 at 1 o'clock.

Pedestrians wore last winter's over coats, and men and women in automobiles snuggled down in furs. A high wind off Lake Superior carrying in thick fog added to the chill.

BACK TO PROSPECTING—TAKING OUT HIS OLD OUTFIT.

FLOWER SUNDAY IN GEORGE STREET CHURCH

Yesterday morning, "Flower Sunday" was observed in the George street Methodist church, in connection with the Sunday School, the scholars occupying the body of the church. The little tots were out in force and were charmingly attired mostly in white, each carrying a boquet of flowers, which was placed in a circle in front of the platform which had been erected for the chair and orchestra.

The services took the form of an inspiring and thoughtful address to the children by Rev. Mr. Couch, pastor of the church, with special music by the excellent choir, greatly augmented under the capable leadership of Mr. Renwick, solos being sung by six year old little Miss Winnie Hamcock and Master Jock Renwick. In his address Mr. Couch referred to the presence of about one hundred young girls from the Barnardo Home, who have just arrived from England, and who occupied pews to the right of the platform.

The Sunday School Orchestra was present and materially assisted in the services, which were most enjoyable and inspiring throughout. The flowers contributed will be given to the hospitals and local charitable institutions.

On Saturday some twenty members of the Peterborough Cricket Club held a banquet at Coleman's restaurant. Mine host had provided a recherche repast, that was done full justice to. The chair was very ably filled by Faptain Whitehouse.

Cricketers Won.

During Saturday afternoon at the Oval, on a good crease, a one innings match was played between the local cricket team and a Toronto eleven. The local team won by the handsome score of 189 to 82. For the home eleven Mr. Levy put up 86 runs and Mr. Boome 29.

PUGILIST JOHNSTONS JOURNEY WILL FINISH IN RUSSIA

Colored Fighter Says He Made No Pretences in Coming Into Canadian Territory

Montreal, June 29.—"What chance di Ketchell have against you?" was the question jovial Dan Galaghan, immigration officer of the Dominion of Canada, threw at big Jack Johnson, heavyweight pugilistic champion of the world, as the latter was awaiting the final signing of the official papers that would allow him to leave for Havre, France to-morrow morning.

The scene was in the sanctum sanctorum of the Dominique immigration offices near Richmond square on St. Antoine street, and Johnson at the time was doing some signing himself. Someone had given him a bunch of admission badges to Delorimier Park for the races and he was distributing them with afree hand. Suddenly one of those present, however, evolved the idea that the badges would be worth much more as souvenirs than as admission tickets to the races, and there followed a general demand for autographs on the pasteboards, which kept the big black fighter busy for about half an hour, even Mr. O'Hoolihan, the Dominion immigration agent, asking for one. It was during this time that Mr. Galaghan poised his question to which the fighter replied

Wouldn't Have a Chance.

"Not a chance in the world. Ketchell was an exceedingly good man, and could beat nearly all the heavyweights in the country, but when a good small man goes up against g good big man it is a foregone conclusion, barring accidents, that the big man must win."

"Well," said Mr. Galaghan, "you better turn up at the boat between nine and ten to-night, as you promise to do, or I'll take a fall out of you myself," and this sally caused general laughter, Mr. Galaghan added as he stuck out a pretty hefty chest: "Oh, well, I weigh 200 pounds. At this one of the men connected with the immigration bureau said; "We tried to get the chief to take a try at him." "Ah," said Mr. OjHoolihan, reflectively, as in memories of athletic prowess of bygone days came back to him. "The best I could do now would be to run."

Johnson, while his right hand, adorned at the third finger with a heavy ring of chased silver carrying a scintillating stone, was kept busy signing Delorimier Park passes, had been a careful listener to the conversation, now said smilingly: "I used to be a good runner myself at one time and have done the hundred in eleven seconds."

FROM COAST TO COAST IN A PETERBOROUGH CANOE VIA CANAL

John H. Sullivan Leaves New York for San Francisco---First to Paddle Through Panama Canal

New York, June 28.—The first coast-to-coast trip ever made in a canoe is the ambition of John H. Sullivan, jr., who left New York in an open canoe late yesterday afternoon, with San Francisco as his destination. He expects to be the first man to paddle a canoe through the Panama Canal.

Oddly Sullivan started north up the Hudson river for his southern trip. He will go through the Erie Canal to Buffalo, thence to Toledo, O., and down the southern shore of Lake Erie, through the Maumee river and canal to the Ohio river at Cincinnati, to and down the Mississippi river to New Orleans. He has no fears of the open water he will then encounter and is confident of reaching the Panama Canal by January, 1914. He will then encounter the most hazardous leg of the trip, facing hundreds of miles of open ocean to California.

Sullivan expects to make at least 25 miles a day. He has lived with the Siwash Indians, who are the fisher people of Vancouver, and often made ten-day trips with them on the ocean

A YOUNG MAN GOT OFF EASILY

At Saturday's police court, a young man, who began to scrap in a local hotel bar on Friday night, was charged as D. and D. He pleaded guilty. A further charge of assaulting an officer whilst in discharge of his duty. To this soft impeachment he replied that he did not remember anything about the alleged assault. Constable Reid said that the prisoner called him vile names and struck him several times. The prisoner was also charged with using profane language. He was let off with a $5 fine, which he paid. A somewhat pathetic incident is that of the barroom fight. It seems that the young man, who is small in statue, though possessing a man size jag, took a sudden dislike to a stranger who entered the bar. The stranger was big. The defendant insulted and struck at the new comer. The latter caught the young man guilty by the neck and put him on the floor. A by-stander, who was disgusted by the actions of the young fellow, said to the stranger, give him a slap on the jaw. The stranger smiled and replied, "What! Hit that little runt? It's only whiskey making him act so ugly."

ESCAPED HIS WIFE EXPLOSION GOT HIM

Paterson, N. Y., June 27—Fate is no friend of Peter Hicks. In spite of everything he could do, he was forced to take his case of divorce into the chancery court, where he is suing his wife on a charge of desertion.

Hicks says that when he found his wife had left him, he felt there was nothing left for him but a job in a powder factory. A few months later his direct prayer was answered when the plant blew up. Hicks was fortunate to be standing near the magazine that exploded.

"This will end my family troubles, observed Hicks as he clipped the top off a high oak tree that stood near the scrambled plant.

To his keen disappointment he was not killed. With five other powder aeronauts he was rushed to a hospital and recovered.

Hicks decided that if a powder mill blowing up wouldn't turn the trick, there was no use of his trying a revolver or gas, so with a sigh of resignation he filed his suit for divorce.

PETES TAKE THE LAST GAME FROM GUELPH NINE, 4-2

A large crowd of fans were present at Riverside Park on Saturday afternoon, the main stand being fairly well filled with the fair sex. The weather was all that could be desired for baseball, and a good game was the result. Peterborough took the last game of the series from Guelph with a score of 4—2. The game was fairly fast throughout and many brilliant plays were pulled off. The Guelpg aggregation worked hard to win the game, but were out-classed all through by the Petes. Tracey, pitching for the Petes put up a good game and Irwin Trout catching, was there as usual with all the old life.

Umps Daly had no occasion on Saturday to put any player out of the game, only on one occasion did he whisper in Manager Cook's ear, that if he said another word, he would send him to the bench and fine him, and Mr. Cook took the hint, and if he said anything more, he made sure that Umps Daly didn't hear him.

The Petes will be away all this week, the first three days at London and the last three at St. Thomas, coming back here again against the Brantford team for three games and three with St. Thomas.
